Figures compiled by the Silk Association of America, concerning imports of dutiable silks at this port during the four weeks ended April 24, show a drop as compared with April of last year. The respective totals were $1,694,095 and $2,164,733, of which fabrics woven in the piece contributed, respectively, $657,632 and $860,004. The only real gain of the month was shown in receipts of velvet ribbons, which increased nearly $70,000, and this was contrasted with a decline of more than $129,000 in the value of silk ribbons brought in during the month. Imports of velvet fabrics, artificial silk yarns, silk laces and trimmings, spun silk or schappe silk yarns, and thrown silks showed liberal declines for the month. Receipts of raw silks, on which no duties are charged, gained quite sharply.

Japanese Raw Silks Advance.

Prices on raw silks advanced 10 yen at Yokohama in the last week, and holders are offering less freely than was the case before the rise. Sales for the week amounted to 4,000 bales, which left stocks in the neighborhood of 11,000 bales. The Canton market is very firm, ... reluctant to sell. At Shanghai the market continues firm and unchanged, the American demand for steam filatures being good. Tsatlees and tussahs are quiet now. Prices are firm at Milan as a result of an active market, though business is rendered difficult by limited stocks. Practically all kinds of silks are being taken in this market, particular interest being shown in coarse sizes and Cantons.

Coverts for Fall.

A canvass of the clothiers on the situation in coverts for the Fall indicates that this particular fabric and garment will be largely featured by the retailers. The sudden dropping off of business on the garment this Spring, it was pointed out, was due entirely to the inability of the clothiers to get sufficient supplies of fabric. This obstacle will be removed for the Fall, although mill agents approached on the subject state that the manufacturers have been slow in turning in orders for the goods, and may be in the same fix next season as they fell into during the one past. One clothier said that there is comfort in the fact that the danger of ruinous price slashing through the use of very cheap fabrics is practically removed as far as coverts are concerned, since there is a wide difference between a good and a cheap grade of this fabric.

Will Probably Use Cotton.

An explanation of the lower prices made, although higher tests are required, for filling the French uniform cloth contract let out recently, was put forward by a selling agent in the piece goods market yesterday, who said that the answer is probably "cotton." The shoddy and waste market, he explained, has been advancing by leaps and bounds due to the big call for this sort of product. "If the mills decide to use cotton as a substitute for wool shoddy," he said, "they will be able to get higher strength tests and at the same time save on the manufacturing of the cloth. The shoddy used in making uniform cloth is now up around 20 cents a pound, whereas cotton for this purpose may be purchased for 10 or 11 cents a pound. There is no doubt in my mind that the mills for the very lack of shoddy will have to use cotton instead."

Jewelry Gains Are Slow.

While jewelry and silverware houses in the Maiden Lane district that have retail departments see a reflection of the returning of prosperity to Wall Street in this branch of their business, it is said by conservative and representative members of the trade that the gain reported from time to time in the wholesale end is small and slow. However, it is steady from all accounts, which is a basis for more or less optimism concerning the future. Not a great deal of local business is looked for during the first half of this month, it is said, but the June wedding season is expected greatly to stimulate sales during the last half. After that not a great deal of active buying is looked for until the buyers come in for their regular Fall stocking up which, it is anticipated, will be more liberal than for the last two years or so. Importers of gems also report a visible improvement in business, though it is not great. Quite a large part of the present business is being done on the so-called semiprecious stones, especially aquamarines.

Sheetings Continue Active.

There was further active trading on sheetings suitable for bag purposes here yesterday, the prices being the same as on the earlier days of the week. Even larger business is looked for on these goods shortly, as it was intimated yesterday in the trade that the bag makers had only begun to scratch the surface. The upturn in cotton had the effect of calling in quite a few of the printcloths that had been offered for sale by second hands at prices under the list figures, but there were several good-sized lots let out during the day by these operators. Chief among them were sales of 39-inch 68-72s at 4¾ cents, 39-inch 80 squares at 6⅛ cents, and 39-inch 72-76s at 5½ cents. Large bids of 4 cents were in the market for 38½-inch 64-60s for May delivery, but they were refused from all accounts. First hands had a fair call for goods for near-by delivery during the day, but bids for future shipments were none too numerous. Spot printcloth prices were:

Will Fight Freight Advances.

The Silk Association of America has begun a campaign to offset the possibility of higher freight rates on shipments of various silks as a result of the Cummins law, which will go into effect on June 3 and which, it is contended, will give the railroads and other carriers a basis for raising their charges of transportation. The law provides specifically that after that date no common carrier, railroad or transportation company shall grant concessions in freight rates on account of being released from full liability on shipments, and the association officials maintain that it will particularly effect silk now being shipped at the first-class rate when the value is released to $1 a pound. To gather data with which to carry on the fight, President Charles Cheney has appointed a Committee on Transportation, which is sending out blanks to be filled in by the members of the association with information concerning loss or damage to raw silk, thrown silk or skein-dyed silk from 1910 to 1914, as well as claims and allowances for damage to raw materials shipped in that period. The committee members are Jerome C. Read, C. H. Cheney, C. E. Lotte, W. S. Roberts and P. A. Salembier.

Better Demand for Crossbreds.

LONDON, May 6.—The offerings at the wool auction sales today amounted to 8,900 bales. The selection was in good condition and the demand was better, especially for crossbreds, which recovered a part of their recent decline. Other wools were firm and in sellers' favor. American buying was slightly better.

Sheepskin Sale in London.

LONDON, May 6.—A sale of sheepskins was held here today. There were 9,370 bales offered. The attendance was good and the demand fair. Good combing merinos and crossbreds showed little change, but other grades declined from 5 to 7½ per cent. and were frequently withdrawn.

"Well, the grocer left their order here by mistake, and I think it only fair."—Indianapolis News.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

The realty market showed a very fair degree of activity yesterday. On the upper west side an unusually large residence was purchased by a buyer for occupancy. The east side Yorkville district furnished a good deal in the purchase by John Volz of the six-story apartment house on the northeast corner of Madison Avenue and Eighty-seventh Street, fronting 50 feet on the avenue by 115 on the street.

It is known as the Clark apartment, and was purchased from the Salisbury Realty Company, of which Edgar A. Levy is resident. The property has been held at $180,000, and the brokers, McDowell & McMahon, state that it was an all-cash transaction.

Mr. Volz has been an active operator in the upper east side residential centre, having recently purchased the five houses known as the New England apartments, at 480 Park Avenue, between Fifty-eighth and Fifty-ninth Streets, with frontages on both those streets, and he also sold a short time ago the northwest corner of Lexington Avenue and Eighty-fifth Street to the Ayer estate of Boston.

Deal on East Twelfth Street.

The seven-story flat 229 and 231 East Twelfth Street has been sold by Leopold M. Rothmann and others to the Meister & Bache Realty Company. The property, which was held at $100,000, occupies a plot 50 by 100.

Fine West Side Residence Sold.

A fine residence sale on the upper west side by a buyer for occupancy, something rather rare in the realty market there, was closed yesterday in the purchase of the five-story American basement dwelling at 327 West 108th Street by J. Louis Schaefer, Vice President of William R. Grace & Co. It was bought from Charles D. Wilder, Treasurer of the Butterick Company, who has lived there about thirteen years.

It has a frontage of 35 feet by 100.11, being near the Riverside Drive corner, and adjoins a 40-foot-front house owned by George W. Wilder, President of the Butterick Company. Mr. Schaefer a few days ago sold his Great Neck estate. The brokers in the residence sale were Slawson & Hobbs and Thomas J. O'Reilly.

Buys 57th St. Residence at Auction.

Frederick Sprenger of Bronxville purchased at auction yesterday in the Vesey Street salesrooms the four-story residence at 109 West Fifty-seventh Street, on lot 20 by 100.5, adjoining the new home of the Freundschaft Club, for $50,000. The property was offered at partition sale and was sold by Joseph P. Day.

Buyers of East Side Loft Site.

The H. V. Realty Company are the buyers of the property at 145 to 151 East Thirty-second Street, sold by the Milledge Realty Company. A twelve-story loft building with stores will be erected on the plot 99.1 by 98.9, by irregular. The Milledge Realty Company accepted in part payment fourteen six-family flat houses known as 80, 82, 84, 86, 90, 92, 94, and 96 Thirteenth Avenue, and 99, 101, 103, 105, 113, and 115 Fourteenth Avenue, Long Island City. William D. Bloodgood & Co. Inc., and John F. James & Sons negotiated the trade, which involved about $350,000.

Harlem Dwelling Sold and Leased.

Barnett & Co. have sold for a client to Jacob Brann, 23 West 126th Street, a three-story dwelling on lot 17.6 by 50 by 100, between Lenox and Seventh Avenues. The same brokers also leased the dwelling for the new owner to Frederick Suess for a term of years.

Bronx Sales.

An investor has purchased from the Anthony Avenue Improvement Company 311 and 313 East 176th Street, two brick two-family houses on a plot 65 by 126.3 by irregular.

B. Rosenblatt and A. Traube have sold for Isaac Lowenfeld to Jenny Fisch, 1,165 Fox Street, a three-story flat, on lot 25 by 69 by irregular, about 127 feet north of Home Street.

Brooklyn.

I. Salzberg sold for The C. W. Construction Company to H. Levy, a three-story two-family stucco cottage, consisting of eighteen rooms, on a plot of 40 by 100, on the northwest corner of Forty-sixth Street and Fifteenth Avenue.

E. J. Hollahan has sold the one-family brick house 572 Seventy-seventh Street, for the Floria Realty Company, to a client for occupancy. Also a lot on the east side of Narrows Avenue between Seventieth and Seventy-first Streets, for Herman Breman to M. Dowd.

William D. Bloodgood & Co., Inc., have sold for cash a three-story modern factory building, 50 by 100, on the westerly side of Steinway Avenue, 100 feet north of Vandeventer Avenue, Long Island City.

The property was held at $27,000, the buyer being a large manufacturer of pure food products, who will improve the property and make several additions to the structure.

To Build 100 Houses in Long Island City.

The G. X. Mathews Company has taken title to about 160 lots on Eighteenth and Nineteenth Avenues, Long Island City, formerly the property of ex-Congressman William Willett of Far Rockaway. The lots are situated opposite the Pennsylvania Railroad holdings on Jackson Avenue and run to Broadway. The company will immediately begin the erection of 100 six-family houses, involving an outlay of close to $1,000,000, including the cost of the land.

Westchester County.

Charles Field Griffen & Co. have sold for the estate of Edward C. Haviland to Joseph Brewster a tract of twenty acres on the south side of Westchester Avenue, Purchase Street section, Rye, N. Y.

Joseph Herzog has sold for D. Krones a three-story fourteen-room residence at 411 North River Street, Hackensack, N. J. The property fronts 175 feet on River Street and 175 feet on Main Street, by 250 feet deep.

Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., Leases Newport Dwelling.

De Blois & Eldridge have leased for Mrs. Lorillard Spencer her place known as Chastellux in Wellington Avenue, Newport, R. I., overlooking the harbor and bay, to Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., of New York City for the coming Summer.

Drug Lease on Sun Building Site.

A lease was recorded yesterday from the Schulte Realty Company to the Riker & Hegeman Company of the store and basement in the building to be erected on the site of the present Sun Building, Nassau and Frankfort Streets. The store leased will be in the portion of the building 30 feet south of Frankfort Street. The lease is to run for twenty-one years from the completion of the building at $13,000 a year. The Schulte Realty Company took a long lease on the entire property last year.

Building Shows a Gain.

The building industries in the Eastern States continue to make gains, the latest reports from seventeen of the larger cities, received by The Engineering News, indicating a gain during April of 23 per cent. in the estimated cost of operations over the same month in 1914. A comparison of the first four months of the year also indicates an appreciable gain.

Commercial Leases.

N. Brigham Hall & William D. Bloodgood, Inc., leased for a term of years for A. H. Matthews, as agent, the entire building at 44 Sixth Avenue to John Dellavoure.

The National Tax Association will hold its annual conference at San Francisco Aug. 10 to 14.

Negotiations are reported pending for the sale of Mrs. Charles Austin Bates's residence on the southeast corner of Riverside Drive and Eighty-third Street.

LATEST CUSTOMS RULINGS.

Copying Paper, Rugs, and Jewelry Among Things Passed On.

D. F. Young, Jr., was overruled yesterday by the Board of General Appraisers relative to merchandise returned by the customs officials as copying papers. Duty was taken at the rate of 30 per cent. ad valorem under the tariff, while the importer set up the claim that the importation should be regarded as paper not specially provided for with duty at 25 per cent. The testimony was that the papers are used solely for copying purposes, and are put up in rolls and hermetically sealed to preserve them in a dampened condition until required for immediate use.

Thomas Meadows & Co. imported collapsible metal drinking cups in leather cases. The Collector returned the cups for duty under the tariff at the rate of 50 per cent. ad valorem as being fitted in leather containers. It was shown that the cups exceeded the cases in value. On this showing the board admitted the articles at 20 per cent. ad valorem under the metal schedule.

Akawo, Morimura & Co. protested the Collector's classification of imported floor rugs. They were returned as manufactures of straw not specially provided for with duty at 25 per cent., while the importers claimed a rate of 3½ cents per square yard as rugs of straw not specially provided for. Judge McClelland said in his decision for the board that, but for the words in the paragraph describing the warp, the claim of the protestants would be well founded. It was conceded that these rugs do not have a warp made of the materials mentioned, but the importers' counsel contended that the provision for warp was not intended by Congress to apply to rugs and mats, but to matting only. The board disagreed, and held that the rugs in question are clearly excluded from classification under the paragraph claimed.

Massee & Co. were sustained in the contention that hammering machines with all accessories, including die stamps, are properly dutiable under the tariff at 15 per cent. ad valorem as "machine tools." It was shown at the trial that the machines in question are used in the manufacture of jewelry chains, are operated by other than hand power, and work upon metal with the aid of cutting tools. The action of the Collector in classifying the machines as manufactures of metal with duty at 20 per cent. was reversed.

The H. H. Tammen Co., Denver, protested the Custom House assessment on unfinished scarfpins, or scarfpin settings, lacking only the stones to make them complete articles. Duty was taken at 85 per cent. ad valorem under the Tariff act of 1909, as articles of personal adornment. The board decided that the claim for entry at 60 per cent. ad valorem as parts of jewelry applied to the goods in dispute. The Collector was reversed.

In deciding protests by Ferdinand Bing & Co.'s Successors, the board ruled that stars and decorations used by actors on the stage are not "jewelry" within the meaning of the tariff laws but, if imported under the Act of 1909, fall within the provision for military ornaments, with duty at 85 per cent. ad valorem.

Theodore B. Starr, Inc., imported ribbons, calendar covers and inserts separately packed. The Collector took duty on the ribbons at the rate of 50 per cent. ad valorem under the Tariff act of 1909, as manufactures of silk, while the calendar covers came in for a tax of 35 per cent. as manufactures of paper. The inserts were classified as printed matter, with duty at 25 per cent. Judge Fischer sustained the claim for entry of the booklets as entireties at 15 cents per pound as "decorated booklets," and ordered a reliquidation of the duties taken on the separate articles.

MAID SAYS CARMANS TRIED TO BRIBE HER

Negro Sleuth Offered Her $300 to Change Her Story, She Testifies.

BAD DAY FOR THE DEFENSE

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., May 6.—District Attorney Smith brought forward the "surprise" today, which has been looked for since the beginning of the present Carman trial. Testimony was introduced to show that a negro acknowledged by George M. Levy, Mrs. Carman's lawyer, to be "affiliated" with the defense, went to see Celia Coleman, the negro woman formerly employed by Mrs. Carman in Charleston, S. C., after the first Carman trial, and said that Mrs. Carman would pay her $300 to change her story of what she had seen in the Carman house on the night Mrs. Lulu B. Bailey was murdered. George Hicks, the colored detective who, it is alleged, offered the bribe to the maid, also told her that he wanted her to get a divorce, marry him and go to New Orleans so that she would not have to attend a second Carman trial if one was held.

Mr. Smith succeeded also in getting into the record the testimony of George Toomer, a cousin of Celia Coleman, to whom, she testified, she told the real story of the Bailey murder two days after it occurred. The District Attorney rested the State's case this afternoon. The general feeling in the courtroom was that the State had vastly strengthened its case against Mrs. Carman since the first trial. After a brief recess, the defense began to present its case, and from the testimony introduced before court closed at 6:35 o'clock it appeared that Mrs. Carman's counsel would rely on the same evidence he introduced at the first trial.

The Defense Startled.

The bribery charge seemed to startle the defendant and her counsel. Mr. Levy made desperate efforts to have Justice Blackmar rule against it before the jurymen had heard the details from witnesses, and took exceptions to the rulings the Justice made in admitting the testimony. Then Mr. Levy sank back in a chair and rested his chin on one hand as the evidence was brought out. Mrs. Carman paled as Celia Coleman told of the alleged bribe offer, and George Toomer corroborated her story.

Mr. Levy, in opening the case for the defense a short time later, did not deny that Hicks had offered Celia Coleman a bribe and that he had asked her to marry him, but he said that the defense "didn't know anything about it and would try to find out."

Another feature of the trial today was the searching cross-examination to which District Attorney Smith subjected Mrs. Ida Powell, Mrs. Carman's sister and one of the witnesses for the defense. In this and his other cross-examinations today the District Attorney showed a fighting spirit which he lacked at the first trial and which seemed to disconcert the defense's witnesses greatly and to unnerve Mrs. Carman.

Celia Coleman was recalled to the stand when the session opened this morning for further cross-examination by Mr. Levy and stood several hours of questioning without changing her story. Some one sitting near Mrs. Carman accidentally dropped a knife or some other object to the floor while the colored girl was on the stand. Mrs. Carman jumped nervously, and then quickly regained the poise which she maintains in the courtroom. Celia Coleman told of the events following her departure from the Carman house in the custody of detectives. Mr. Levy made her answer many questions as to whether threats or influence had been used to make her change her story, but failed to gain any admissions of value to the defense.

The District Attorney was able to get in testimony regarding the attempted bribery through one of Mr. Levy's questions put to Celia Coleman. George Hicks, the colored detective, was formerly in the employ of the Burns Detective Agency, and was one of the negroes who had charge of Celia Coleman while she was being held as a witness for the Grand Jury, and before the first trial.

"Did Hicks ever tell you to change your story?" asked Mr. Levy, when questioning the servant about the story she told at the Coroner's inquest.

After Mr. Levy finished his cross-examination Mr. Smith said to the witness:

"Celia, Mr. Levy asked if Hicks ever asked you to change your testimony. Now suppose you tell the jury if Hicks did ever ask you to change it."

"Yes, Sir," replied the colored girl.

"When?"

"Last December."

"Where?"

"Down home."

Fail to Bar Bribe Evidence.

Mr. Levy jumped to his feet and began to protest against the questions. Justice Blackmar quieted him and asked who Hicks was. Previously Hicks had been referred to as a detective working for the prosecution. "Hicks is now with the defense," said Mr. Smith. Mr. Levy admitted that Hicks was now "affiliated with the defense," but still fought against the admission of the testimony. Mr. Smith explained that his reason for introducing the evidence was to prove an attempt at bribery, and the Justice overruled objections.

"Hicks said Mrs. Carman would give me $300 not to tell the story again," said Celia, when permitted to answer more of Mr. Smith's questions, "and asked me to go to a lawyer and get a divorce, then to marry him and go to New Orleans, and not to come back."

Two witnesses heard Hicks make the bribery offer. Celia Coleman said, naming them as Toomer, her Freeport cousin, whom, it was later brought out, Mr. Smith sent to Charleston with Celia Coleman to report on any influences brought to bear on her there, and another negro named Flood.

Mr. Levy again questioned the girl, and in one of his questions the District Attorney found an opportunity to get Toomer on the stand, which John J. Graham, Mrs. Carman's trial counsel at the last trial, succeeded in preventing. Mr. Levy asked Celia Coleman to whom she had told her present story of the things she saw on the night of the murder besides the District Attorney, before she was taken to the Grand Jury room. She replied, "to my cousin, George Toomer."

Mr. Levy asked if Celia Coleman had written to Mrs. Carman to learn if the bribe was "official." She had not, she said.

Told Cousin of the Murder.

Mr. Levy then objected when Mr. Smith began to question the witness about what she had told Toomer, but Justice Blackmar overruled the objection. It was the State's only opportunity to meet the defense's charge that Celia Coleman's present story was the result of influences brought to bear on her by the State after she left Freeport, the Justice said. Mr. Levy's argument that he didn't know of any other case in which such an exception had been made proved fruitless. Celia Coleman then told the story which she said she told Toomer before leaving Freeport. It was substantially the same as her present story.

Toomer, who works as a plasterer, lives in Freeport and came from Charleston, S. C., was the next and last witness for the prosecution. The old negro spoke with the quaint accent of the old South, and his shining black features were set off by a grayish mustache and large, old-fashioned "specs." He "guessed" he was 50 years old and said his mother was the cousin of Celia Coleman's mother. His story of Celia Coleman's visit to him on the Thursday evening following the shooting was the same as the woman's in practically every detail. He said that Celia Coleman told him she tried to prevent Mrs. Carman from entering the doctor's office after the shooting, while she had the revolver under her shawl, but that Mrs. Carman said: "I ain't gwine do anything mo'." Celia Coleman told him, he said, that Mrs. Carman went to the servant's room the morning after the shooting and said Celia was not to tell about the affair, that they "might lock her up and play ghosts on her."

Mr. Levy started his cross-examination by showing that the old negro couldn't trace his relationship to Celia Coleman, and afterward succeeded in making the old man very indignant. Under these circumstances Toomer barked his answers at the little lawyer in mirth-provoking fashion, sometimes indignantly, asking: "Who, me?" when Levy questioned him about his actions. Mr. Levy asked Toomer if he had anything to prove that Celia told him the story of the shooting on Thursday night, and the negro said: "Yas, I done wrote it down." He then hunted through his pockets until he found two much-folded pieces of notepaper and handed them to the lawyer. Mr. Levy offered them in evidence, but later withdrew them. Mr. Smith seemed as much surprised by the production of the notes as was Mr. Levy, and Toomer said he had not told anybody about them before.

On being questioned by Mr. Smith Toomer corroborated Celia Coleman's story about the proffered bribe. He said the offer was not made while he was in the room, but that "he never did trust dat nigger," and so listened outside the window while Hicks was talking to the woman. Hicks told Celia that they couldn't compel her to go back to New York, he said, and urged her just to "go before a notary and say she had made a mistake, and he could get some money for hisself and get $300 for her from Mrs. Carman." Celia, he said, asked him how it was that he wanted her to do this "when he done tell her befo' always to tell de truth." Then the District Attorney rested his case, though he is known to have several more witnesses to produce in rebuttal.

Mr. Levy in his opening address said he would show that it was some other person than Mrs. Carman who shot Mrs. Bailey. He would show that there was no jealousy, he said, and that the domestic relations of the Carmans had been happy. The defense would also prove that Mrs. Carman had never fired a pistol in her life, Mr. Levy promised. Then he continued:

Mrs. Carman to Testify.

"Mrs. Carman must sacrifice herself. She is going on the stand herself, and you can understand the delicacy of having to bare to you gentlemen all of the secrets of her life. She would tell all about having the dictograph installed between her bedroom and Dr. Carman's office, he said, and would testify that she had it put in only to verify stories she had heard about the doctor and to learn why his friends called him a devil, and used other terms of like kind in teasing him. Regarding Celia Coleman, he said: "We shall show you, gentlemen, that she is the most monumental liar of today," and that the seed of the story she told today had been planted while she was in the custody of detectives after leaving the Carman home. George Toomer helped in changing her story, he said. Mr. Levy said he would show that a "mysterious man" was seen lurking about the neighborhood on the night of the murder, and that a man was seen to run across the Carman lawn and jump the fence separating the adjoining lawn.

In regard to the bribery story Mr. Levy said:

"We don't know if Hicks offered $300 or 300 cents, but we don't want to keep anything from you, and he is here right now." Mr. Levy said that Hicks would be put on the stand "if he feels inclined" to tell about it.

Mrs. Helen Corby, daughter of Mrs. Ida Powell, Mrs. Carman's sister, and her husband, Charles L. Corby, of 285 Eastern Parkway, Brooklyn, were the first witnesses called for the defense. They repeated the stories they told at the first trial, which were to the effect that Celia Coleman said, at the time of the shooting and on the following days, that she didn't know anything about the case. Mrs. Corby, who is young and was stylishly dressed today, began answering the District Attorney's questions smilingly, but his tactics had changed since he last examined her, and soon she was nervous and pale. She admitted that she had attended family conferences at which Mr. Levy was present, when the evidence in the case was discussed. Charles L. Corby, under cross-examination, seemed uncertain as to where some of the members of the Carman household were when he came to the house after the shooting, and said that although others were crying he saw no tears in Mrs. Carman's eyes.

Mrs. Carman's Sister Examined.

Mrs. Ida Powell was questioned sharply by Mr. Smith, and she looked nervously about the room while he was cross-examining her. Mr. Smith brought out the fact that she was divorced and that she was on most confidential terms with Mrs. Carman. But she said that Mrs. Carman had not told her of the dictograph or of her desire to overhear the doctor's private conversations.

Mrs. Powell said she did not know who the two girls were who ran out of the doctor's waiting room when they heard the shot fired. Then Mr. Smith asked sharply:

"The doctor never told you one of them was up in Canada and that he got a letter from her, and that it would disgrace her if she had to testify?"

"No," said Mrs. Powell.

"When you went to the doctor's office didn't you hear Dr. Carman say: 'Florence did it,'" shouted Mr. Smith, "and didn't you say: 'I think she's losing her mind?'"

"Oh, no, Sir," answered the witness.

During the examination of Platt Conklin, Mrs. Carman's father, Mr. Smith again drove home the fact that the household had gone to Mrs. Carman's room after the shooting. Mr. Conklin said that he hurried to the house as soon as he learned of the tragedy and "went to Mrs. Carman's room first." Elizabeth Carman, Mrs. Carman's daughter, was called as a witness by the defense, but after she had told her story Mr. Smith declined to cross-examine her. She is only 10 years old. Mrs. Platt Conklin, aged 73, again told her story and, under Mr. Smith's volley of questions, said she, too, went to Mrs. Carman's room. She said the door from the pantry to the doctor's office was locked, when Mr. Levy was examining her, but to Mr. Smith she admitted thta she wasn't sure of this. Celia Coleman says she entered through this door. The strain on Mrs. Conklin was great, and she called for water and smelling salts on leaving the stand.

Mr. Levy then called a new witness, John G. Haberle, a drug salesman. He told of having seen a woman disguised as a man lurking about the Carman house about a month before the shooting, but the Justice smilingly ruled this testimony out on the ground that it had nothing to do with the case. Mr. Levy also produced two negroes who said they were passing the Carman house on the night of the shooting when one heard a sound that might have been a shot, and saw a man run across the lawn and jump a picket fence. The other negro, however, said he didn't see the man, and neither witness knew what time it was when this happened. Miss Harriet R. Wallace of Freeport testified that after 8 o'clock on the night of the shooting she saw a man she didn't know loitering along a street near the Carman home.

Mrs. Carman is expected to take the stand the first thing tomorrow morning.

WANTS FAST SHIPS TO SOUTH AMERICA

THAT'S HOW EUROPE WINS

Exporters engaged in the South American trade say that if the merchant of Buenos Aires or Rio de Janeiro had as much incentive to travel in the United States as in Europe a great deal of the business that now goes to European nations would come here. The chief incentive, it is said, need not be the prospect of a lively visit, but a quick, comfortable voyage from the southern port of departure to New York. As it is, many Argentinians and Brazilians who have business in this country go first to London or Havre and there transship to New York, because they can gain time in so doing and enjoy life in the big Atlantic liners.

O. H. Fuerth, head of the Ethelburga Syndicate, which has handled considerable financing for South American countries, is persuaded that if a single fast steamship, equipped as comfortably as the boats of the Cunard or White Star Lines, were to be run between New York and Buenos Aires for passenger traffic alone it would quickly bring a stimulus to our trade.

"It would be a losing venture, probably, for the ship owner," says Mr. Fuerth, "at least for a time, but the results in trade would be certain to follow. A few days ago I saw a friend, a prominent citizen of the Argentine, off for home on a boat sailing from Brooklyn. How he lamented the prospect. A voyage of twenty-eight days lay before him when he stepped aboard, and he spoke of what I have had in mind for some time, namely, that an effort to promote closer personal relations between the people of the Northern and Southern Hemispheres, through faster traveling facilities, would help our sales greatly.

"There was nothing to be said against the boat he sailed on. It was built for trade purposes, because more profit lies in carrying hides and fruit and rubber than in transporting passengers. The steamship companies individually are out to make money, and their equipment, naturally, is of the kind that carries the most goods at the least expense. The majority of the passengers taken south or brought from the south are people who are enjoying vacation trips, and the time element does not enter into their plans.

"Far different conditions prevail among the vessels that sail between English, German and French ports and the River Plate. Many of them match the excellent North Atlantic liners in speed, and are fully as luxurious. The South American of means likes luxury, and he likes speed. I believe that a very important element in the hold obtained by European manufacturers on South American markets is the comfort and fast service that European steamships give their South American voyagers.

"A mercant of Buenos Aires, say, has decided that he wants to get away from his office for a while. A good time and relaxation awaits him in Paris—but he could enjoy himself equally in New York. Paris is only a few days away he will find on the boat several of his friends and their families. It is a pleasurable trip, and when he arrives the delights of the city do not take up all his time. He looks over the shops with an eye to finding goods to take back, or to order for future delivery. And every time he makes a satisfactory deal, he thinks more highly of Paris as a place for laying in supplies for his business.

"I know men in South American cities who would come to New York frequently for purposes of business that now go to Europe. When they do come, they always sail to London, and then take the other leg of the triangle to this port. There is always the chance that when they arrive in the British capital, with the intention of coming on to New York, they are influenced to transact their business there, and go back home without making the North Atlantic trip.

"It was not so very long ago that the Germans recognized the value of fast passenger vessels in promoting trade. I was in Para when the first Hamburg-American steamer came in to establish a regular servic. A strenuous rate-cutting contest followed among the lines engaged in the Para trade, but the Germans were quite willing to lose plenty of money to carry their point, and they succeeded.

"An effort to establish a government line of ships has been shelved in the United States. It seems to me that there is an excellent opportunity for starting a Government steamship service between hte Unitetd States and the countries to the south, with the primary purpose of giving South Americans a first-hand introduction to the American markets on a broad scale. There might not be much profit in it from the passenger business alone, but trade relations certainly would be strengthened and the American manufacturer would reap a great benefit."

WEIGHTED BODY IN RIVER.

Identified by His Niece as That of Harrold G. Olson of Chicago.

Garwood Coote of 340 Audubon Avenue was in a canoe in the Hudson River off Fort Washington Point yesterday when he found the body of a man with a stone tied around his neck. Policemen whom Coote called got the body ashore and had it taken to the Morgue, where Detectives Hawkins and Geary found papers in the pockets which led to the identification of the man as Harrold G. Olson, a designer of women's dresses, whose home is in Chicago.

The body was identified by Miss Helen Lundes of 413 West 146th Street, an iece of Olson. She said she had no idea of why her uncle had killed himself if it were true that he had tied the stone around his neck and jumped in the river.

She said he was single and well to do. She came here a week ago to look for him after he had disappeared from him home and had applied to the police for aid.

Mrs. Shrady returned from the South this week ill, and Johnson feared the noise and bustle of the arrival of the firemen might cause a relapse.

100 CATS GUARD NEW YORK POLICE

MEN NOW SLEEP IN PEACE

Station House Pets Credited with Wisdom Far Beyond Average of Their Species.

New York's police force is the owner of more than 100 cats, distributed among the various station houses where they have their own police duty to perform. This consists of ridding the houses of mice and rats.

Most of the cats wer econtributed by generous policemen. Others just naturally strayed into the stations. Were it not for the presence of these cats some of the station houses which are in the neighborhood of stables and rookeries would be overrun by rats. Policemen who have faced all kinds of danger unflinchingly do not hesitate to say that it makes them feel decidedly uncomfortable to be awakened from their slumbers by a rat who is using the floor of the dormitory for a playground, and that it is mighty reassuring to be able to drop off to sleep with the knowledge that the station house cat is faithfully patroling.

The station house cat, policemen assert, possesses characteristics distinctly different from those of the common house cat or any other species of the tiger family. For example he is not given to nocturnal prowlings. He spends most o his time in the station house, and when he does go out into the night he does not stray far. Most of these cats, police Lieutenants, who have studied them, assert, have a strong antipathy for an intoxicated person, and when such a prisoner is brought into the station the cats walk away in disgust. Instead of being called "Tommy" or "Kitty" they are usually addressed gruffly by the police as "You" and "Hey You."

In the Morrisania Police Station there is a beautiful white cat named Peter. He is the pride of the station house, and was born there five years ago when he was adopted by Lieutenant Peter Brady, after whom he was named. Peter has strong likes and dislikes. His favorite resting place is the top of the station house desk. When a Lieutenant whom Peter dislikes is on duty nothing will induce him to remain near the desk, but he will seek a far corner of the station. Peter was a great favorite with the late Lieutenant Frank O'Rourke. When O'Rourke wanted his pet he would blow a police whistle, which would bring Peter to the station. There was a certain Lieutenant that disliked Peter as much as the cat disliked him. This Lieutenant went in the back room of the station one night for a few minutes, leaving Peter in charge of the place. When the Lieutenant returned he found that the ink had been spilled all over the pages of the blotter. The Captain wanted to know how it had happened, and the Lieutenant blamed it on Peter.

There is a large gray cat in the Alexander Avenue station. Many names have been suggested for this cat, but as the men have not been able to agree on one they are now conducting a voting contest and the cat will be presented with the winning name. In the West 152d Street station there is a large cat, which spent his early life in a butcher shop. He makes daily visits to the butcher shops in the neighborhood, and when he is absent nad the police wan to set him on the trail of a mouse who is disturbingtheir equanimity they know that he can be found at a neighboring butcher's.

In a Brooklyn precinct there is a battle-scarred cat named Gray Whiskers. Some time ago an old building opposite the station house was being torn down, and under cover of night a regiment of rats swarmed from the ruins into the station house. The men in the dormitory were awakened by the sound of many feet and saw by the light from a full moon that the visitors were rats, and that they were being hotly pursued about the place by Gray Whiskers, which was giving them no quarter. No count was kept of the number of rats which Gray Whiskers dispatched, but those he failed to slay he routed completely from the station house, so terrifying them that, according to the police, no rat since has had the temerity to show his nose in the place.

WORLD'S OLDEST LAWS.

Yale Professor Finds Prodigal Son Statute on a Tablet.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 6.—Further translations of the oldest laws yet unearthed, those on the Babylonian tablets at Yale, were announced tonight by Professor Albert Clay. He translated two of the laws several weeks ago. Tonight he announced translations of seven more.

The third covers the case of the loss of a hired ship, through carelessness; the fifth refers to the repudiation of an incorrigible child; the sixth covers elopement; the seventh the enticing away, or the abduction of a girl after her parents had refused to give her in wedlock; the eighth deals with the killing of a hired ox by a wild beast, and the ninth the loss of a hired animal through neglect.

The fourth recites a law regarding a son who shall wish to depart from home and sets forth that a portion of his inheritance be given to him. Professor Clay points out that this law, which was enacted more than 2,000 years before Christ, really governed and applied to the case of the Prodigal Son.

IZZY THE PAINTER IN COURT.

Isidor Steinkreitzer, known also as Izzy the Painter, who was sent to Sing Sing for not less than twelve and a half or more than twenty-five years when he confessed two years ago that he set more than seventy fires in tenements, appeared in court yesterday as the chief witness against Isidor Lichtstein, on trial for arson. Steinkreitzer told how four years ago he set fire to Lchtstein's apartment at 40 West 116th Street, and enabled him to defraud the North British and Mercantile Insurance Company of $650.

Steinkreitzer was paroled last February. His confession two years ago led to the conviction of several insurance adjusters after the investigation of the "arson trust."

He said he was to get 10 per cent. of whatever Lichtstein collected. Lichstein and his wife were absent from the apartment when he fire to a bundle of rags coaked in benzine. Lichtstein had his furniture insured for $1,200, but he collected only $650. Steinkreitzer said he got $65.

Court Orders Examination Before Trial of Trust Co. Suit.

Oscar Hammerstein must submit to an examination before trial in the suit of the Equitable Trust Company to restran him from selling the Victoria Theatre or from doing anything that might impair the value of 3,998 shares of the Hammerstein Amusement Company. Consequently there were no bidders.

The Equitable Company says the only person seekng to force the sale of the Vctora Theatre property by foreclosure proceedngs s Mr. Hammerstein himself, and that if he succeeds the values of the shares of the amusement company will be wiped out.

Justice Bijur of the Supreme Court granted an application to examine Mr. Hammerstein. Further efforts to foreclose on the property have been enjoned.

RUMOR OF CONGRESS CALL

Loss of Lusitania Recalls Firm Tone of Our First Warning to Germany.

CAPITAL FULL OF RUMORS

Reports That Liner Was to be Sunk Were Heard Before Actual News Came.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Never since that April day, three years ago, when word came that the Titanic had gone down, has Washington been so stirred as it is tonight over the sinking of the Lusitania. The early reports told that there had been no loss of life, but the relief that these advices caused gave way to the greatest concern late this evening when it became known that there had been many deaths. Although they are profoundly reticent, officials realize that this tragedy, probably involving the loss of American citizens, is likely to bring about a crisis in the international relations of the United States.

It is pointed out that the sinking of the Lusitania is the outcome of a series of incidents that have been the cause of concern to this Government in its endeavor to maintain a strictly neutral position in the great European war.

It is impossible to say tonight what effect the loss of American lives on the Lusitania will have on the Government. Judged from the little that can be learned it is a safe prediction that President Wilson will endeavor to ascertain all the facts, including evidence as to whether a German submarine was responsible for the sinking of the vessel, before proceeding to determine the course to be pursued. The news that many lives had been sacrificed, probably as many as a thousand, was given to him at the White House about 1 o'clock this evening, but no word came from him as to what effect this intelligence had on him.

The State Department tonight sent instructions to the American Embassy in London to send the names of any Americans who might have been killed or injured in the disaster. A bulletin from THE TIMES, saying probably 1,000 lives had been lost, was sent to the White House as soon as received and laid before President Wilson. The news that two torpedoes had been fired into the Lusitania by a submarine and that the Lusitania sank fifteen minutes afterward was also sent to the White House, but reached there after the President had gone to bed. The President retired about 11 o'clock.

Rumors of Congress Session.

There were reports this evening that Congress would be called in extra session, but these were not justified and the most that can be said is that while the Government is greatly concerned over the situation, it has shown no inclination toward excitement or taking hasty action.

This afternoon and early this evening officials were relieved over the reports that no lives had been lost. But in spite of the calmness in the upper official circle during this period, there was little effort elsewhere to conceal the view that even if no Americans went dow with the liner this Government might find itself face to face with a grave situation.

The statement from London that the Lusitania was torpedoed without warning were regarded as showing the delicacy of the situation, for this Government, in the warning it delivered to Germany concerning the proposed submarine warfare on merchant ships, laid down the principle that the obligation to visit and search a merchant ship before sinking or taking her captive was imposed on the German Government.

But it is too soon to say, or even to attempt to predict, wha course the United States Government will adopt. It is clear that the first move of the Government will be to ascertain all the facts obtainable and that the inquiry will be pursued, as far as possible, by officers of the United States. Until such an investigation has been completed and President Wilson and his advisers have determined what attitude the facts warrant the Government in adopting, no formal diplomatic action may be expected. For the present the higher officials content themselves with a refusal to answer questions as to the position likely to be taken and with expressions of the hope that the early reports that no lives were lost in the Lusitania are true. That was Secretary Bryan's way of treating the matter before the alarming bulletins began to arrive.

What impresses Washington most tonight is that the loss of American lives was apparently the result of the action taken in the face of the warning given to Germany that such an outcome of a German attack might bring about a rupture in the friendly relations between the two countries. The language employed in that warning note was regarded as too drastic by some public men here, but the defense of its use was that it would be better to be outspoken before any critical incident than to wait until it occurred, when public feeling in this country might be aroused to the highest pitch and demands made for redress against Germany.

While there was interest here in the last voyage of the Lusitania on account of the risk she ran, it was not an intense interest. The feeling among officials and others appeared to be that the Germans would not go to the extreme of sinking a passenger vessel with women and children and many American citizens aboard. Even the advertisement inserted in American newspapers last Saturday by the German Embassy, warning Americans not to take passage for Europe in the ships of Germany's enemies, did not cause any alarm here with particular reference to the Lusitania, although it produced a feeling of irritation.

President Wilson Shocked.

President Wilson had just finished luncheon and was preparing to go golfing when the first news of the Lusitania disaster reached the White House. It came in the form of a newspaper bulletin and was received by Rudolph Forster, the executive clerk to the President. Mr. Forster, who was in the executive offices, wrote a note to the President telling him of the report. It was said afterward that the President was greatly shocked and perturbed, but that he expressed thankfulness that no lives had been lost, as the bulletin had it.

The President canceled his golfing and decided to remain at the White House. A little later, when further bulletins were positive in stating that no lives had been lost, the President went motoring. Tonight he received press bulletins concerning the Lusitania in his study in the White House. These were sent to him from the telegraph room of the executive offices. It was said that he had no visitors during the evening. A bulletin saying that probably 1,000 lives were lost in the disaster was sent to him shortly before 10 o'clock.

Secretary Bryan was at luncheon at Roosevelt Calls It An Act of Piracy.

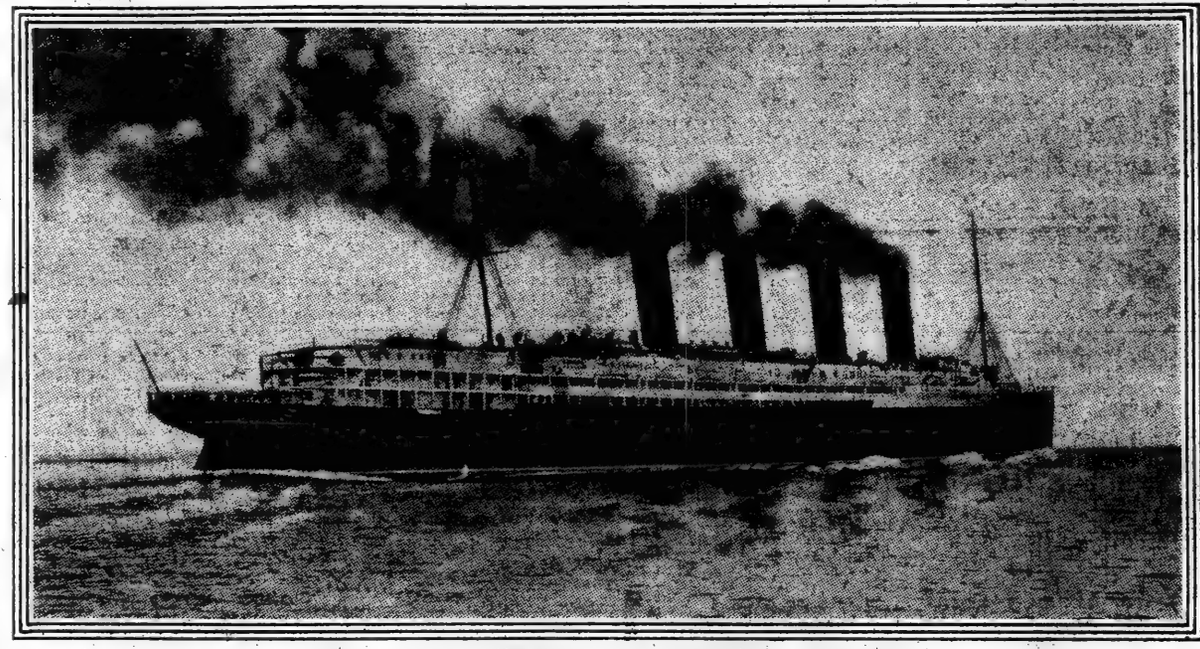
SYRACUSE, N. Y., May 7—Colonel Roosevelt tonight characterized the sinking of the Lusitania as "an act of piracy."

"I do not know enough of the facts," said the Colonel, "to make any further comment or to say what would be proper for this Government to do in the circumstances.

"I can only repeat what I said the other day when the Gulflight was attacked. I then called attention to the fact that months before the German war zone was established, and deeds such as the sinking of the Lusitania were threatened, that if such deeds were perpetrated they would represent nothing but mere piracy."



THE LOST CUNARD STEAMSHIP LUSITANIA

Cunard Office Here Beseiged for News; Fate of 1,918 on Lusitania Long in Doubt

Official news of the sinking of the Lusitania yesterday reached New York in fragmentary reports, and several hours elapsed between the first unverified rumor of the disaster and the cable messages that told at night of the saving of some of the passengers and gave meagre details of the most sensational incident of its kind in the war.

The early accounts that indicated all on board had been saved reassured hundreds of friends and relatives of passengers. Latery it was made known that lives had been lost and probably many persons had been injured.

Among the prominent passengers rescued was George A. Kessler. The list of those of whom no word was received included A. G. Vanderbilt, Charles Frohman, Charles Klein, Justus Miles Forman, and Elbert Hubbard, besides persons widely known in society.

A cablegram sent to Farley Hopkins of The Yale News staff at New Haven, by his father, who was aboard the Lusitania, stated that the vessel was sunk not beached, that three hundred persons had been already landed, and that the rest in small boats were making for shore. The message reached New York at 8:15 o'clock and was signed "Lee Higginson & Co., London."

Message to Cunard Office.

The first word of the sinking of the Lusitania received here reached the local offices of the Cunard Line, 21 State Street, at 11:41 o'clock yesterday morning, but was not made public until late in the afternoon. The message, which was sent from the head office in Liverpool, read:

> The Lusitania, we regret to advise, an unconfirmed report states to have been torpedoed by a submarine at 2 P. M. Friday, ten miles from Kinsale, and sunk at 2:30. There is no news as to the safety of passengers or crew.

Following this dispatch there was a message which had been picked up by the wireless station at Land's End, evidently a distress call from the liner, which said:

> Come at once. Big list. Position ten miles west Kinsale.

A third dispatch from Queenstown stated:

> All available craft in harbor dispatched to assist. Weather here beautifully fine. Wind southeast, light.

By 3 o'clock in the afternoon the news of the sinking of the Lusitania had been spread in the city and the Cunard offices were besieged by relatives and friends of the passengers on board. Owing to the alterations in and additions to the passenger list on sailing day, last Saturday, it took some time to get the correct figures, which were finally given out as 290 first, 601 second, and 362 third class passengers. Of the cabin passengers thirty-six had been transferred fro mthe Cameronia on Saturday morning. This delayed the Lusitania's departure from 10 o'clock to 12:28.

1,918 Persons on Board.

The officers and crew numbered 665 men instead of the usual complement of 950, on account of fewer men being carried in the engineers' and stewards' departments. Thus there were in all 1,918 persons on board.

The Cunard agents told all inquirers that they would give out the messages as fast as they were received and had no intention of keeping back the news from the public. Several bulletins were received from the Liverpool office, but few of them contained any definite statements and they were cancelled, in some instances, within an hour. One received at 4 P. M. read:

> Motor fishing boats towing two boats filled with passengers, probably fifty. Tug Stormcock making Kinsale. Some passengers on board. Many rescue vessels are now apparently making Queenstown.

The first dispatch stating positively that the Lusitanit had sunk reached the Cunard office at 5 P. M. It read:

> Old Head Kinsale Station reports about twenty boats, all belonging to Lusitania, are in vicinity where sunk. About fifteen boats are making for the spot to resume.

An unconfirmed report was received late in the afternoon that all the passengers and crew had been saved in small boats and rafts. This information was given out to the people waiting in the Cunard office, and many of them went home. It was estimated that fully 500 inquiries were received by telephone and telegraph in the afternoon from relatives and friends of passengers on board. Long-distance calls were received from St. Louis, Atlanta, Montreal, and Toronto.

> Liverpool, May 7, 1:51 P. M., (New York Time.)
> Following received by Admiralty, Galley Head, 4:25 P. M.: Several boats, apparently survivors, southeast nine miles. Greek steamer proceeding to assist.

The next bulletin was:

> Liverpool, May 7, 2:33 P. M., (New York Time.)
> Queenstown wires Old Head: Large steamer just arrived in vicinity, apparently sending assistance. Tugs, patrols, &c., now n the spot, taking boats in tow. Motor fishing boat with two Lusitania boats bearing probably for Kinsale. We have wired Kinsale agents to render every assistance, to advise us if any boats are towed in there.

This was followed by:

> Cork newspaper reports that 300 passengers landed at Clonakility. Old Head wire begins: Cancel last message. Stormcock taking passengers and boats from motor fishing boat, proceeding Queenstown.

First News of Loss of Life.

> Liverpool, May 7, 8:29 P. M. (New York Time.)
> Admiralty have had message from Queenstown saying between 500 and 600 landed at Queenstown, including many hospital cases, some of whom have died. Also number landed at Kinsale.
> CUNARD, Liverpool.

> Brethertons and family are safe.

The message evidently referred to Mrs. Cyril H. Bretherton of Los Angeles and two children, who were in the second cabin. Mr. Bretherton came here from Los Angeles with his wife and children for a visit to relatives in England. He remained in New York a long time before sailing.

A report that Cornelius Vanderbilt had received a cablegram from his brother, Alfred G. Vanderbilt, who was a passenger on the Lusitania, was denied by Mr. Vanderbilt when he called up himself to get news.

Robert S. Franks, Vice President of the Carnegie Corporation of New York, who lives at West Orange, N. J., waited all afternoon to get news of his niece, Miss P. Hutchinson.

Toward evening the crowd diminished in the office, as it was believed that no more news would be received until this morning.

The Cunard Company gave out the following statement late in the afternoon:

> The Cunard Company's whole concern is with regard to the possible loss of life of passengers and crew. The material loss is covered by insurance. According to meagre reports so far received the Lusitania was torpedoed without warning, and sank within a very short space of time. A large number of ships are known to be afloat, and the weather is reported to be fine and calm. Every effort is being made to obtain further details, and all information will be published without delay.

> LIVERPOOL, May 7, 9:25 P. M., (New York Time.)—Queenstown wires that First Officer Jones states about 500 to 600 lives saved. This includes passengers and crew, and is the only estimate we are able to make. In the meantime we are going through hotels, lodging houses, &c., tonight, and will wire tomorrow fullest possible list. In the meantime injured and dead are taking up our attention.
> CUNARD, Liverpool.

Reports 450 Rescued.

> Queenstown wires the tug Stormcock landed 150, including passengers and crew. It is reported that the trawlers Dock and India Empire have about 200 on board. The tug Flying Fish has 100, and three torpedo boats brought in 45 living and 4 dead. We are putting the survivors in

Loss of the Lusitania Fills London With Horror and Utter Amazement

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, May 8.—Stupefaction is the word which best describes the first impression created by the news of the sinking of the Lusitania. People seemed unable to realize that at this stage of the world's progress such a deed could be committed as an act of war.

"I have no words for it," said Lord Rosebery, and everywhere one found the same sentiment repeated.

It was some hours between the time the first reports of the disaster were received at the Admiralty and the time the news was made public by a communiqué from the Press Bureau. During this interval the news spread quickly through official, Parliamentary, shipping, and newspaper circles.

At the Cunard offices in the later hours of the afternoon men rushed in asking, "Is it true?" When and how they heard the news was a mystery. Shipping offices could give little or no information until the official statement was issued that the Lusitania was sunk by a submarine at 2:33 P. M., eight miles south of West Kinsale.

Shortly after 7 P. M. a dispatch reached THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent from Liverpool that it was stated that many passengers and crew were unofficially reported saved. But at that hour this information was without foundation. The chief reports here were to the effect that only 300 out of 1,900 souls on the mammoth liner had been saved. Seeing that the vessel had sunk so quickly, it was argued that the loss of life must have been great, that the torpedo must have created such havoc that an immediate heavy list would follow, and in that event the boats were already hanging out on their davits the difficulty of manning and filling even half of them in the time available would have been so great that the possibility of saving a majority of the people aboard was minimised.

When first moments of dull horror passed speculation began. One of the first theories advanced was that to have caught the Lusitania the German submarine could not have given the speedy liner any warning. Previously reported activities of German submarines in the waters to the southwest of Ireland encouraged the belief that several vessels of the underwater fleet must have been on the lookout for the Cunarder so as to demonstrate to the world that German warnings were not empty threats.

It was suggested that as the incoming transatlantic liners usually followed a certain distinct track, running close to the southern shore of Ireland it was an easy matter for two or more submarines to lie in wait for the Lusitania, and once she was observed to let torpedoes go at her vast length presenting a huge target.

Early in the afternoon it was not known at the Cunard offices where the Lusitania had met destruction. It was suggested that the company was unaware whether she was steaming to Liverpool by the north or south of Ireland and that her choice of course was probably directed by Admiralty orders received by her captain. That she was being convoyed was generally assumed, and as an addendum to this assumption, it was believed that Germany would invoke the fact of convoy as a reason wherefor no warning could be given.

Scene in the Strand.

There was a remarkable scene in the Strand when the news first became known. A newsboy shouting out the contents of a bill of an evening paper "Lusitania torpedoed and sunk, official!" was stopped outside the Hotel Cecil by a police constable, who refused to believe the news. He intimated the lad would be arrested if it were shown he was crying out false news. The boy promptly showed the policeman the official news of the disaster in the "stop-press column" and he was allowed to proceed. The incident attracted a huge crowd and in a few minutes the boy had sold all his papers.

The official news was first published at 5:45 P. M. and created a profound impression on the public, and especially in the west end hotels where the guests gathered round the newspaper managers. Many business men are at present staying at the Hotel Cecil, Savoy, and other big hotels in Northumberland Avenue and those who had expected relatives and friends to arrive in London today hurried in taxicabs to make inquiries at the Cunard offices. Americans in evening dress rose hurriedly from the dinner table when they heard the news and drove off to the shipping office in Cockspur Street. Americans did not attempt to hide their anger. A group outside the Carlton Hotel hailed a newsboy and on glancing at the official statement became infuriated, shouted and shook their fists in disgust.

Vain Inquiry At Ship Office.

Describing the scene inside the London Cunard office, says The Chronicle:

"One or two middle-aged ladies sat about quietly reading newspapers splendidly hoping against hope. Early in the long vigil the overstrung nerves of one young girl gave way and she shrieked in hysterics. She had a brother and sister on the vessel, but all she could be told was that the boat had gone down and that it was hoped that the passengers were safe.

"A Canadian officer from the War Office asked for news of Lady Allan and a General whom he thought were on board the vessel. He went away as barren of news as the others waiting uatiently around.

"One man told me quietly he had four friends on board who had persisted in spite of all warnings in sailing on the ship. In a corner sat an old, white-headed clergyman and his wife, waiting with tear-filled, tragic eyes for news of their son, who was returning from America on the torpedoed liner.

"Inquiries as to the safety of this friend and that relation were continually arriving by telegraph and telephone. The American Ambassador sent a representative to discover all that was known, and requested that he be kept in telephone communication.

"To every one the company officials were courteous and considerate alike, speaking in quiet reassuring tones, moving silently about the anxious grief-stricken crowds. On a long office counter newspaper men, British and American, quietly scribbled their messages. At intervals of an hour or so (they really seemed like days or years) cables carried across the counter, were hastily pasted on huge sheets of paper, and placed conspicuously on the walls. Every insertion was passed with miraculous rapidity from tip to tip, but mostly they left nobody much wiser or more hopeful.

"In the small hours of this morning the crowds were hardly less. Those who had left earlier in the night now returned and new watchers were constantly arriving. There could be no sleep for any of them this night."

Great Britain Needs More to Protect Her Trade Routes, Says Naval Critic.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, May 8.—Lord Charles Beresford, asked for an expression of opinion on the sinking of the Lusitania, said he thought it was due to a shortage of cruisers to protect the trade routes.

This had been his opinion for years, he said.

Admiralty Puts Embargo On News Dispatches

LONDON, May 8.—It is stated that the British Admiralty is not withholding any verified facts regarding the Lusitania, but declines to pass dispatches based merely on rumor.

It is expected that the Admiralty will issue a statement as soon as authenticated facts are available.

DEATH OF FROHMAN IS FEARED IN LONDON

"What Is America Going to Do About It?" Asks British Colleague of Manager.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 7.—The theatrical world of London is stunned over the reported fate of Charles Frohman. Mr. Frohman is a familiar figure in the theatrical life of London, and theatre managers and players alike regarded him highly. Speaking tonight, Frederick Harrison, lessee of the Haymarket Theatre, after expressing his intense shock over the report of Mr. Frohman's drowning, asked abruptly:

"What is America going to do about the torpedoing of the Lusitania? What is Washington to say about the drowning of American citizens? Is America going to take it lying down?"

Mr. Harrison spoke of Mr. Frohman as one of his most intimate friends and a man whose loss the entire theatrical world, here and abroad, would feel keenly.

"Only three days ago I received a letter from Mr. Frohman, written in New York April 24," said Mr. Harrison. "In it Mr. Frohman, after speaking of his intention to make a trip to see me and other theatrical managers on business, wrote: 'I hope to see you soon.' From the letter I took it he was sailing within a few days.

"All I can say is that the theatrical profession loses a clever man and a very kind friend. Mr. Frohman had tremendous influence in the theatrical field and his energies were directed the right way. The sinking of the Lusitania is a terrible act and Germans ought to be held by America to the fullest accountability."

AMERICANS IN LONDON ARE DEEPLY STIRRED

A. J. Drexel Denounces Sinking of the Lusitania — Pinchot Refrains from Commenting.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 7.—Anthony J. Drexel, at his home in Grosvenor Square, denounced the sinking of the Lusitania to THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent as "the most infernal outrage that has happened during the war." Mr. Drexel sailed on the Lusitania for New York on March 13, when Captain Dow was in command. He came back on the American liner New York with Harry Lehr because of Mr. Lehr's fear of sailing on a steamer flying other than the American flag.

"I don't see how the American Government," said Mr. Drexel, "can do anything but go into the war itself. If the lives of its citizens are to be snuffed out this way by the Germans America must act sternly if Americans are to feel that the protection of their country means anything. Can it be that America will supinely allow the Germans to murder her citizens? For my part, I expect the Government at Washington to take drastic measures now with Germany. If it means war to protect our citizens, I'm for war. I feel helpless to express my feelings of dismay and horror over this damnable thing. How do we know the Germans will not torpedo a ship flying the American flag? Where is this terrible work of the Germans to end? What is to be done with the Kaiser, who has the blood of innocent American men and women on his hands! Is America to raise no voice in protest? Her protest must be in thunder tones, mute of cannon, that strike to the depths of the Berlin iniquity."

Gifford Pinchot, who says he still holds an official commission from the American Government in the war relief work, expressed himself tonight at the home of his brother-in-law, Sir Alan Johnstone, where he has been staying since the Germans escorted him out of Belgium, would not speak of the Lusitania case because of his connection with the Government.

"I wish I were able to speak, but I must remain silent," he said as tears came to his eyes. Mr. Pinchot had arranged to return to New York on the Lusitania a week from tomorrow, having got word from Washington several days ago that it was inadvisable for him to try to carry out his work in the war zone. When he heard of the torpedoing of the Lusitania Mr. Pinchot got into touch with the American Line to make reservation on the St. Paul tomorrow for himself and his wife. When he talked with THE TIMES correspondent tonight he was not sure he would be able to get the accommodations he wanted, and said he might have to postpone going.

"But I'll go back to New York on a steamer flying the American flag," he said.

ATTACKED IN BROAD DAY

Passengers at Luncheon—Warning Had Been Given by Germans Before the Ship Left New York.

LONDON, Saturday, May 8.—The Cunard liner Lusitania, which sailed out of New York last Saturday with 1,918 souls aboard, lies at the bottom of the ocean off the Irish coast.

She was sunk by a German submarine, which sent two torpedoes crashing into her side, while the passengers, seemingly confident that the great, swift vessel could elude the German underwater craft, were having luncheon.

How many of the Lusitania's passengers and crew were rescued cannot be told at present. Official statements from the British Admiralty up to midnight accounted for not more than 500 or 600, and unofficial reports tell of several hundreds landed at Queenstown, Kinsale and other points.

Up to midnight 520 passengers from the Lusitania had been landed at Queenstown from boats. Ten or eleven boatloads have come ashore and others are expected.

A press dispatch says seven torpedoes were discharged from the German craft and one of them struck the Lusitania amidships.

Probably at least 1,000 persons, including many Americans, have lost their lives.

Sank in Fifteen Minutes.

The stricken vessel went down in less than half an hour, according to all reports. The most definite statement puts fifteen minutes as the time that passed between the fatal blow and the disappearance of the Lusitania beneath the waves.

There were 1,253 passengers from New York on board the steamship, including 200 who were transferred to her from the steamer Cameronia. The crew numbered 665.

No names of the rescued are yet available.

Story of the Attack.

The tug, Stormcock, has returned to Queenstown, bringing about 150 survivors of the Lusitania, principally passengers, among whim were many women, several of the crew and one steward. Describing the experience of the Lusitania, the steward said:

"The passengers were at lunch when a submarnie came up and fired two torpedoes, which struck the Lusitania on

"Captain Turner immediately ordered the boats out. The ship began to list badly immediately.

"Ten boats were put into the water, and between 400 and 500 passengers entered them. The boat in which I was, approached the land with three other boats, and we were picked up shortly after 4 o'clock by the Storm Cock.

"I fear that few of the officers were saved. They acted bravely.

"There was only fifteen minutes from the time the ship was struck until she foundered, going down bow foremost. It was a dreadful sight."

At the time this dispatch was sent from Queenstown two other vessels were approaching the port with survivors.

The Cunard Line received a message saying that a motor boat, towing two boats containing fifty passengers, and two tugs with passengers, was passing Kinsale. A majority of the rescue boats are proceeding to Queenstown.

An Admiralty report states that between 500 and 600 survivors from the Lusitania have now been landed, many of them being hospital cases. Several of them have died. Some also have been landed at Kinsale, but the number has not yet been received.

Hit 10 Miles Off Kinsale Head.

This greatest sea tragedy of the war, because of the terrible loss of lives of non-combatants and citizens of neutral nations, took place about ten miles off the Old Head of Kinsale about 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

A dispatch to the Exchange Telegraph from Liverpool quotes the Cunard Company as stating that "the Lusitania was sunk without warning."

According to a Queenstown dispatch the Lusitania was seen from the signal station at Kinsale to be in difficulties at 2:12 P. M. and at 2:33 she had completely disappeared.

This indicated, the dispatch added, that the liner was afloat twenty-one minutes after what evidently was the beginning of her trouble.

Official announcement was also made here last night by the Cunard Line that the Lusitania remained afloat at least twenty minutes after being torpedoed, and that "twenty boats were on the spot at the time." Sixteen more boats, officials of the line said, had been dispatched to the scene for rescue work.

As soon as the Lusitania's wireless call for assistance was received at Queenstown at 2:15 o'clock, Admiral Coke, in command of the naval station, dispatched to the scene all assistance available.

The tugs Warrior, Stormcock, and Julia, together with five trawlers and the local life boat in tow of a tug, were hurried out to sea. It was thought it would take most of them about two hours to reach the spot where the Lusitania was reported to be sinking.

One dispatch received here said the liner was eight miles off the Irish coast when she finally went down.

London Torn With Anxiety.

All the afternoon, following the first startling message from Ireland and the fragmentary bulletins, indicating a possibility of heavy loss of life, London waited with intense anxiety for further news.

This anxiety grew steadily through the evening as hour after hour passed without any definite statement from an authoritative source as to the extent of the disaster.

The Cunard offices, which will remain open throughout the night, were besieged by a great crowd, largely composed of women, many of them weeping bitterly as the hours passed and no definite news came of those aboard the Lusitania.

Accommodation was provided inside the offices for those who had relatives or friends on the steamer, while hundreds waited outside, eagerly reading the scanty bulletins which told of rescue boats arriving at Kinsale and Queenstown, but gave no names of the saved, and consequently did not allay the anxiety.

Flickering Gleam of Hope.

There was a gleam of hope in the general gloom soon after 8 o'clock, when this announcement was made unofficially:

The Cunard Company has definitely ascertained that the lives of the passengers and the crew of the Lusitania have been saved.

This was speedily proved untrue, however, but the more optimistic still refused to credit the early reports of the swift sinking of the big liner. It was believed that her watertight bulkheads would tend to keep her afloat, and if she floated a reasonable length of time before going down, it was possible that rescuing ships got to her side in time to save all on board.

Owing to the fact that all the news of the Lusitania came through the Admiralty, and that only fragments filtered through at intervals, the crowds got increasingly more impatient, though the Cunard officials posted quickly all bulletins received.

Late in the evening the Admiralty felt compelled to give out notice that it was not holding back any known facts, but did not feel justified in giving out rumors.

Americans Besiege Embssy.

The American Embassy and Consulate and the American newspaper offices were flooded with telephonic inquiries from Cross Section of the Lusitania.

Americans as to the fate of the passengers on the Lusitania, but there was no definite news there until after midnight, and the only hope that could be held out was that some boats had landed survivors and others had been seen making for the shore. The Embassy decided to remain open all night, so that any news that was received could be made public.

Up to 1 o'clock no news tending to allay the public anxiety had been received in the city. Then dispatches, issued by the Admiralty, indicated that among the survivors landed at Queenstown were some injured, presumably by the explosion.

A later dispatch from the same source increased the apprehensions in this direction. Those wounded are being sent to the naval and military hospitals.

A press dispatch from Queenstown reported that 400 pasesngers and crew had been landed at Kinsale. This stated that none of the first-class passengers had been saved, but this is proved not true by private dispatches.

An Admiralty statement states, however, that the survivors from the Lusitania landed at Kinsale numbered about eleven.

A private telegram from Clonakiety to Dublin says that several hundred passengers had landed that from the Lusitania.

FEARED FOR LINER'S SAFETY.

Washington Heard Alarming Rumors Before the News Came.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Information gathered among officials of the Government and in diplomatic quarters confirms the belief that plans for the destruction of the Lusitania were made several weeks ago. First, the German Embassy was instructed to advertise in the leading newspapers of the United States warning passengers against travelling on ships belonging to enemies of Germany. Anonymous warnings then were said to have been sent to individuals who proposed sailing on the Lusitania. Most significant of all were letters received here from officials in Germany by individuals saying that the Lusitania surely would be destroyed.

From the day the ship sailed from New York officials here have received inquiries from many sources almost daily as to the safety of the vessel. One official was told with much positiveness today that this was the day selected for the destruction of the vessel.

The naval radio station at Arlington has been on the alert for news, and from time to time has been reported as having picked up messages saying the vessel was sunk. Inquiry at the Navy Department each time failed to confirm the reports, and they were not circulated because it was feared they would sprad unnecessary alarm.

At the German Embassy, while no comment was made as to whether it was known that the vessel was to be destroyed, it was said the Embassy knew the Lusitania carried arms and ammunition and, being advised of the resolution of the German Admiralty to attack ships that carried, officials had believed she would be attacked. At the embassy and among diplomats friendly to Germany there was a general satisfaction amounting almost to relief when the first reports came that no lives were lost, for it was urged that the purpose the German submarine campaign was only to destroy British commerce and ships, but no lives. There was a disposition on the part of the Germans to inquire also wether the Lusitania carried any guns on her decks, which might place her in the class of a warship and make unnecessary, according to the rules of international law, the giving of warning.

BULLETINS STIR UP WAR SYMPATHIZERS

The first reports of the sinking of the Lusitania, by a German submarine posted on the bulletin boards around the city caused great crowds to gather and stirred heated arguments and a number of personal encounters. The police stationed at these places had their hands full keeping the peace.

When Paul Zeider of 416 West 126th Street passed Times Square at 6:30 o'clock last evening he saw on the bulletin board the news that the Germans had sunk the Lusitania. He shouted: "Hurragh for the Germans!" and threw his hat in the air. There was an angry outcry, and a dozen men rushed for him. When Traffic Policeman MacDonald, stationed at Broadway and Forty-third Street, had shoved his way into the centre of the small riot, he had to call Patrolman Foley to help rescue Zeider. The German sympathizer failed to appreciate this service, and began struggling with the policemen. He was then taken to the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station and locked up on a charge of disarderly conduct.

In front of THE TIMES bulletin board, in Herald Square, in Park Row, and, in fact, everywhere people congregated to talk about the sinking of the Lusitania, there were angry arguments.

WILSON SHOCKED AT TORPEDO BLOW

the Shoreham Hotel when the first bulletin was received here. With him were Secretary Garrison, Secretary Daniels, Secretary Lane, Secretary Wilson, and Mr. Tumulty, the Secretary to the President. As the party finished luncheon and was leaving the dining room a newspaper man handed Mr. Bryan the bulletin telling of the sinking of the big Cunarder.

Bryan Hurries to Office.

It was read eagerly by all the Cabinet officers and Mr. Tumulty. Secretary Bryan hurried to the State Department and asked if any official news of the disaster had been received. Nothing had come, however. It was an hour later before the official news reached the Department.

This was in the form of a cable message from Walter H. Page, the American Ambassador in London, received at 3:05 P. M., and was as follows:

"The Lusitania was torpedoed off the Irish Coatst, and sunk in half an hour. No news yet of passengers."

This message was repeated to the White House over the Government telegraph wire.

No other official information came until after 9 o'clock tonight, when the State Department received this message from Consul Frost at Queenstown, Ireland:

"Lusitania sunk at 2:30. Probably many survivors. Rescue work progressing."

Secretary Bryan declined to comment on the Lusitania disaster when he was questioned by newspaper men. He expressed satisfaction over the reports that no lives had been lost, but he declined to go beyond that. His reticence was typical of the attitude displayed throughout official circles, where there was an evident appreciation of the seriousness of the situation.

May Group Protests.

In the absence of any authoritative statement of the Government's position, opinion here is inclined toward the view tha the United States will group the Lusitania case with those of the American tank steamer Gulflight and the British passenger steamer Falaba. In the sinking of the Falaba by a German submarine Leon C. Thrasher, an American citizen, lost his life. Two members of the crew of the Gulflight jumped overboard and were drowned when tha vessel was torpedoed, and the Gulflight's Captain died of heart failure sixteen hours afterward.

No representations have ever been made by the United States to Germany on the subject of Thrasher's death. An investigation is now being made by American officers in England and Germany in an effort to get at all the facts connected with the Gulflight affair, with the primary purpose of determining whether a German submarine was responsible for the attack on the vessel. It was suggested here this evening that when the Government came to make representations to Germany concerning the death of Thrasher it probably would include in its note references to the explosion against the bow of the Gulflight, provided evidence was obtained to show beyond a reasonable doubt that the injured had been done by a German torpedo, and to the sinking of the Lusitania, granted also that there was evidence of a German attack.

In grouping these three incidents the Government, it was said, would be in a position to maintain the contention that Germany had disregarded the warning of the United States concerning attacks by German submarines on American merchant vessels and on foreign vessels carrying American citizens.

In that warning, which was addressed to Germany in the form of a diplomatic note pertaining to the German war zone order, with its consequent submarine warfare against merchant vessels, this Government said that if a German war vessel should destroy on the high seas an American vessel or the lives of American citizens, "it would be difficult for the Goernment of the United States to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights which it would be hard, indeed, to reconcile with the friendly relations now so happily subsisting between the two Governments."

The War Zone Order.

To obtain an idea of the bases of the position that may be assumed by the United States Government, it is necessary to keep in mind the several diplomatic notes and certain occurrences that have to do with the German war zone order, which provided for hostile operations by German submarines against merchant ships of Germany's enemies. The points of these bases may be set forth as follows:

1. The German Government issued a decree providing that food supplies of the civilian population of the empire should be taken over and distributed by the Government.

2. Great Britain construed this action as meaning that all food supplies in Germany, or shipped to Germany for the use of the civilian population, were to be taken over by the German Government for the use of its armed forces. Great Britain then took action indicating that she intended to prevent any foodstuffs from going to Germany. Up to that time she had permitted foodstuffs for the civilian population to go to Germany if carried in neutral vessels.

Our Flag Protest.

3. Following the action of the British Government in detaining the Wilhelmina, an American ship loaded with food suplies from the United States for the civilian population of Germany, the German Government issued its war zone order, providing that a submarine warfare should be waged against British, French, and Russian ships within a prescribed area of water adjacent to the coast of the British Isles, and warned neutral nations that they should keep their merchant ships away from the war zone, on account of the danger that they might be mistaken for ships of the enemy and made to suffer the consequences.

4. The Lusitania, the vessel sunk today, flew the American flag on a voyage from New York to England, and Germany took advantage of this incident to justify the war zone order. The use of the flag was the subject of a protest by the United States to Great Britain.

5. The United States Government protested against the war zone order as far as it might apply to American ships, and insisted that the well-defined right of visit and search to determine the nationality, destination, and cargo of a merchant vessel should be exercised by Germany in order to prevent the possible sinking of an American vessel by a German submarine or other warship. At the same time, this Government warned Germany that friendly relations between Germany and the United States might be severed if a German warship should destroy an American vessel or cause the loss of American lives through sinking a vessel of other nationality with Americans on board.

6. The war zone order caused the British Government to issue the Order in Council providing for stopping all supplies to Germany, even if carried in neutral bottoms and intended for civilians.

7. The British passenger ship Falaba, bound for Africa, was torpedoed by a German submarine and Leon C. Thrasher, an American citizen, was drowned.

8. The American ship Gulflight was sunk off the Scilly Isles, supposedly by a torpedo fired by a German submarine, and two members of the crew were drowned. All others on the Gulflight were saved except the Captain, who died from heart failure.

Modus Vivendi Failed.

After the issuance of the German war zone order, and the promulgation of the British Order in Council, which carried into effect the practice of the British Government in nolding up neutral vessels with cargoes of foodstuffs for Germany the United States Government endeavored to effect an arrangement in the form of a modus vivendi by which American foodstuffs were to be permitted to go to Germany under a guarantee from the United States that they would be distributed only to non-combatant civilians. These negotiations failed.

Examination of the official British Admiralty chart of the south coast of Ireland in the Navy Department late this afternoon in connection with the various bulletins from London, Liverpool, and Queenstown threw considerable light on the difficulties that would be encountered in rescuing the 1,900 persons constituting the passengers and crew of the Lusitania. According to the only message that appears to have come from the Lusitania in the form of distress calls received by the Land's End wireless station the position of the Lusitania was given as ten miles south of Kinsale. Interpreted in the light of subsequent messages, this message from the Lusitania was accepted as meaning that her position was about ten miles south of Old Head of Kinsale, a rocky promontory on the Irish coast about six and one-half miles due south of the town of Kinsale, which stands in from the coast on a narrow harbor.

Struck in Deep Water.

The point given by the Lusitania is located in water 49 fathoms, or 294 feet, deep. The 40-fathom line, within which the water is less than 240 feet deep, is nearly 4½ miles from the coast at Old Head of Kinsale, the nearest point of land to the accident. The 30-fathom line, behind which the water is not over 180 feet deep, runs 1 2-3 miles from the coast at Old Head of Kinsale. The 20-fathom line, behind which the water is not over 120 feet deep, is a mile from Old Head of Kinsale, and the 10-fathom (60 feet depth) is a half a mile from Old Head. These measurements based on official soundings by the British Admiralty are sufficient to show the precipitous shelving of the ocean depths and the difficulty that would be encountered in trying to beach the Lusitania.

If the Lusitania was struck ten miles from Old Head of Kinsale, as indicated by the Lusitania's message, it would have been necessary for the giant Cunarder to travel not less than 8½ miles in order to reach water in which there would be a depth of 20 fathoms, or 120 feet, and this water would be too deep for beaching. The nearest point at which the Lusitania could reach water of not more than ten fathoms, 60 feet depth, would be 9½ miles from the point of torpedo attack, and within a half mile of Old Head of Kinsale. It is not thought that the Lusitania could have been beached at all off Old Head of Kinsale, the shores of which are of rock and almost vertical. To beach the Lusitania its Captain would have been compelled to steer into Courtmacsherry Bay, a large arm of the ocean, west of Old Head of Kinsale, and bounded on the west by a promontory known as Seven Heads. To be beached in Courtmacsherry Bay the Lusitania would have been forced to travel not less than twelve miles after being struck.

Twenty-eight Miles from Queenstown.

The air-line distance by watar from Queenstown to the place where the Lusitania was struck is shown by the British Admiralty chart to be twenty-eight miles from Queenstown. This means that vessels sent in the rescue fleet from Queenstown had to travel about sixty miles in making the round trip, and this could not be done in less than about six hours.

The three nearest points of the Irish coast to the point where the Lusitania was torpedoed were the promontories of Old Head of Kinsale, Seven Heads, and Galley Head. Old Head of Kinsale is fifteen miles southwest of Roche Point, the entrance to Cork Harbor, which leads to Queenstown and Cork. Seven Heads is seven miles west-southwest of Old Head of Kinsale and ten miles northwest of the point where the Lusitania was torpedoed.

Galley Head is ten miles west southwest of Seven Heads, and seventeen miles west-northwest of the point where the Lusitania was struck. Some of the wireless messages received at Liverpool came from the Admiralty wireless station at Galley Head, which is on the Galley Head promontory, just mentioned. One of the cable messages received by the Cunard Company in New York this afternoon from Liverpool stated that a Cork newspaper reported that 300 passengers had landed at Clonakilty.

This probably means that these passengers landed at Clonakilty Bay, which is situated between Galley Head and Seven Heads and fifteen miles from the point where the tragedy occurred. The town of Clonakilty is two miles inland from the head of this bay. There are two landing coves in Clonakilty Bay. These are Dunnycove Bay, on the west side of Clonakilty Bay, three and one-half miles south of the town of Clonakilty, and Barry Cove, on the east side of Clonakilty Bay, five miles southeast of the town of Clonakilty.

No Railroad There.

No railroad touches the shore of Clonakilty Bay. Any passengers landing on that bay would have to travel over rocky roads to Clonakilty, the end of the Clonakilty branch of the Cork and Bandon Railway. Once at Clonakilty these passengers, in order to reach Queenstown, woud travel over this branch railway to Clonakilty Junction, a distance of eight miles, then go eastward through Bandon to Cork, about twenty-two miles, and thence by rail about ten miles to Queenstown.

One of the Cunard Line's messages from Liverpool said the Admiralty wireless station at Galley Head reported having sighted several boats apparently containing survivors nine miles southeast and that a Greek steamer was proceeding to assist. Nine miles southeast of Galley Head would mean that these boats had gone considerably off their course, and would mean that their boats had drifted a little south of west about ten miles from the place where the Lusitania was struck.

The nearest point of approach to shore for persons in boats making away from the place where the Lusitania was struck would be Courtmacsherry Bay, ten miles distant from the point of attack, and five miles nearer than Clonakilty Bay. Courtmacsherry Bay is between the promontories of Seven Heads and Old Head of Kinsale, and there are many places on its shore where passengers in small boats might safely land. Arms of Courtmacsherry Bay are Seven Heads Bay, Boat Harbor, Garylucas, Ringalurisky Point, and West Holeopen Bay. Those who may have succeeded in landing on the west side of this bay would take the Owenkeagh Railroad from the town of Courtmacsherry to Ballinascarty, on the Clonakilty Branch Railway, and then go through Bandon to Cork. Those landing on the east side of this bay would have to travel by highway to the town of Kinsale, whence they could proceed by the Kinsale Branch of the Cord and Bandon Railway to Cork and Queenstown.

A high Government official, who is an expert in nautical and maritime matters, ventured the suggestion tonight that perhaps only half of the lifeboats of the Lusitania could have been used in the circumstances of the loss of the vessel as reported.

"The press and official dispatches agree that the Lusitania sank in half an hour," he said. "To have sunk so rapidly the Lusitania probably listed quickly and heavily. Otherwise the vessel, constructed as she was, would have gone down very slowly if she had settled straightaway without any heavy list. If complete developments show that the vessel listed rapidly it will probably be found that the lifeboats on one side were not used, or only part of them used. If the vessel listed to the starboard very quickly it would have been difficult to use the lifeboats on the port side because these boats would not reach the water. They would strike the side of the vessel and turn over. The lifeboats on the starboard side could have been, of course, used while the vessel was listing to starboard. The Lusitania was heavily bulkheaded. There were coal bunkers built along both sides to protect the machinery against shell attack.

But this coal would not give protection against torpedo attack. A torpedo tearing a great hole in the side of a vessel would let in the water, but if the hole were near the bunkers the coal would impede the inflow of the water somewhat. If the Lusitania settled straightaway without listing, I think it would have been possible to get off the 1,900 persons in half an hour, but it would be quick work and depend altogether on conditions met at the time. With the vessel listing, if only half of the lifeboats were used, that would account for heavy loss of life."

GERMAN EMBASSY HAD WARNED OF ATTACK—TURNER TOLD OF NOT BEING PROTECTED LAST TRIP

LINER UNPROTECTED, CAPTAIN COMPLAINED

"Admiralty Never Trouble to Send Out to Meet Lusitania," Turner Said.

WARNED OF MINES BEFORE

Officer Now Here Asserts the Only Vulnerable Spot Was Right Under Engine Room.

In spite of the warnings that had been received from time to time that the Germans would make an attempt to blow up the Lusitania, Captain William T. Turner expressed no fear for the safety of his ship when he sailed from New York last Saturday.

"I wonder what the Germans will do next?" was his only comment when he read the advertisement in THE NEW YORK TIMES sent out by the German Embassy warning Americans that they sailed at "their own risk" on British ships, which were liable to destruction in the war zone.

When Captain Turner was questioned by a TIMES reporter regarding the ship being met off the Irish coast by British torpedo destroyers, he replied:

"The Admiralty never trouble to send out to meet the Lusitania. They only look after the ships that are bringing the big guns over, like the Orduna and the Transylvania, last voyage. On the eastward trip I never saw a warship until we reached Liverpool. The ship is steaming under three sections of boilers, and will average about twenty-two knots if the weather is fine, which ought to bring her into Liverpool about Friday evening."

One of the Cunard officers now in port, who was on the Lusitania on her last voyage, yesterday confirmed Captain Turner's statement that the liner had not sighted a single warship before arriving at Liverpool.

Cautioned by Wireless.

"We received a warning by wireless from one of the warships stating that mines had been laid forty miles south of the Old Head of Kinsale and advising a strict lookout," he said. "Captain Turner is one of the best shipmasters I have ever known, courageous to the extreme, and always at his post, calm and confident in himself and his crew.

"We passed ten miles west of the Fastnet and about seven miles southwest of Kinsale, which lies about forty-seven miles east northeast of the Fastnet. Every precaution was taken by the Captain when we neared the danger zone. All boats were swung out ready to lower and life rafts and collapsible boats were uncovered and ready for launching. Two lookout men were posted on the foc'sle head, two more in the crow's nest, and two officers on the bridge. In addition either Captain Turner or J. C. Anderson, the staff Captain, were on the bridge when land was sighted until we reached Liverpool.

"You see that it is impossible for a master to take a ship into a harbor like driving an automobile into a town. Coming in from the Atlantic he has to get his bearings either from the Fastnet or Kinsale, and that is where the German submarines evidently laid for him. In my opinion the Germans had two or three submarines between the Fastnet and Kinsale, so that they could signal his approach if he managed to run past the first one and the other would get the ship.

"The after section of boilers on the Lusitania have been shut down since the beginning of the war and her average speed was not more than twenty-two knots, but in time of danger the Chief Engineer might make a spurt up to twenty-three for a little while. To sink the ship, the torpedo must have struck her right under the engine room, because that was her only vulnerable spot.

"The officer explained that the number of firemen and coal trimmers was smaller than normal on account of the boilers shut off, and there were fewer stewards, as the number of cabin passengers was fewer than usual at this season of the year.

Warning of Passengers Denied.

There were rumors before the Lusitania sailed that some of the passengers, including Charles Frohman, Alfred G. Vanderbilt, and Charles Klein, had received telegrams warning them not to sail on the ship. This was denied by the agents of the Cunard Line, who sent a wireless message to Captain Turner asking him to investigate the rumor. At 11 o'clock last Saturday night a reply was received which read:

"No one received telegrams of the kind indicated. Turner."

On the previous voyage there were rumors that the Lusitania was to be attacked and A. J. Drexel, Mrs. W. B. Leeds, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lehr canceled their passages at the last moment and sailed on the American liner New York. Mr. Drexel told a TIMES reporter that he had not been warned in any way but had changed his ship on account of Mr. Lehr, who had weak nerves and did not like submarines. On the Lusitania's last voyage no one cancelled, and the passenger list was the biggest eastward sailing this year.

The color of the Lusitania's funnels was changed from red with black top to black by Captain David Dow last November, and her superstructure forward by the bridge was changed from white to gray, but afterward was restored to its original color.

It was Captain Dow who raised the American flag on the Lusitania nearing Liverpool on Jan. 30, which provoked considerable comment at the time, as it was stated that he had been ordered to do so by the Admiralty.

Captain Turner said on the last previous voyage of the Lusitania that the instructions issued by the Admiralty to all shipmasters nearing the danger zone were: "Show neutral colors or none."

The Lusitania carried life boats and rafts sufficient to accommodate 2,605 persons. These included twenty-two life boats which carried sixty-eight persons each; twenty Chambers collapsible boats, carrying fifty-four each; twelve McLean-Chambers collapsible boats with a capacity of forty-nine each; two Henderson collapsible boats, carrying forty-three each, and fourteen life rafts, with capacities varying from twenty to forty each. There were also nearly 3,000 life preservers on board.

The life-saving apparatus is examined every voyage in Liverpool by the Board of Trade officials when the boats are lowered into the water and the life jackets placed on deck for inspection.

TURNER A SAILOR 46 YEARS.

Lusitania's Captain Is Commodore of Cunard Fleet.

Captain W. T. Turner, Commodore of the Cunard fleet, has been for years one of the famous skippers of the transatlantic trade. He is 59 years old, but looks twenty years younger, and since he was a lad has followed the sea. He is a commander in the Royal Naval Reserve and was the first commander of the Lusitania's great sister ship, the Mauretania, when that famous craft went into commission. Just before the war started Captain Turner commanded the Aquitania, the newest and biggest of the Cunarders.

When the war broke out and the Cunard fast express service was reduced to one ship—the Lusitania—Captain Turner was assigned to command that vessel, and it was due largely to the great confidence of the traveling public in his seamanship and wisdom that the passenger lists of the lost Cunarder continued big despite the German threats and the submarine ring with which Germany is endeavoring to encircle the British Isles.

Captain Turner was born in Liverpool in 1856, and began his sea career as a deckboy on the clipper White Star, his first voyage being from Liverpool to Aden, around the Cape of Good Hope. He was then only 13 years old, and in the forty-six years that have elapsed since that time his life as a sailor has been uninterrupted.

When the White Star arrived at Guanape Islands in 1869 there was lying in that port the sailing ship Queen of the Nations, the skipper of which was his father. At the Guanape Islands the future Captain transferred to his father's ship, and early in 1870 he arrived back in Liverpool.

Saved from Sharks.

On his return to Liverpool Turner joined the sailing ship War Spirit, and subsequently served on the ships Duncraig, Royal Alfred, Prince Frederick, Thunderbolt, and Royal George, all of them full-rigged ships, and all of them famous in their day.

Once, when he was second mate of the Thunderbolt, bound for Calcutta, in the monsoon season, Turner was on the jibboom fishing for dolphins. A big comber gathered and he was swept into the sea. A life buoy was thrown to him by the mate who was on the poop deck, and Turner caught it and kept afloat for an hour and twenty minutes until a boat reach him. The ship was surrounded by sharks, but the noise made by young Turner kept them away until he was hauled into the jolly boat.

The Captain of the Thunderbolt, who was an old-school mariner, looked over the side as the boat came up to the jacob's ladder and exclaimed, "Is that you, Mr. Turner?"

"It is, Sir," replied the rescued second mate.

"Well, you can come on board and go to your bunk for three days. Empty your watch before you turn in," added the methodical skipper, "or the salt water may rust the works."

After he got to command sailing ships Captain Turner circumnavigated the globe several times, going out to New Zealand via Cape of Good Hope and returning via Cape Horn. After two voyages as a junior officer in the Inman line later the Leyland steamer Egyptian, he joined the Cunard service in 1878 as third officer of the Cherbourg, in the Liverpool and Mediterranean service. After two or three voyages Captain Turner felt the call of the clipper ship and left the Cunard Line to take command of the clipper bark James Kennedy of Liverpool, and later the Star of the East, where he remained until he rejoined the Cunard Company in his former position on the Cherbourg in 1882.

In April, 1903, he received his first command in the Cunard Line as Captain of the Aleppo, in the Mediterranean service, and later had the Carpathia, Ivernia, Umbria, Caronia, Carmania, Lusitania, and Mauretania.

The rank of Honorary Commander in the Royal Naval Reserve was conferred upon Captain Turner by King George when he opened the Gladstone Dock, Liverpool, in August, 1913.

Honored for Rescues.

Captain Turner holds the South African Transport Medal for services rendered while serving as an officer of the old Cunarder Umbria, and also the Shipwreck and Humane Society's Medal for saving a lad at sea. While in command of the Mauretania in 1912 Captain Turner rescued from the life boats, in which they had taken refuge, a part of the crew of the British steamship West Point, who had abandoned their ship and taken to the boats when the West Point was afire from end to end. For his services on this occasion he received an illuminated address from the Shipwreck and Humane Society.

Captain Turner is married and is the father of several children. One of his sons is now fighting in France as a member of the Honorable Artillery. Miss Mercedes Desmore, the actress, who is appearing in support of Miss Margaret Illington in Henry Arthur Jones's play "The Lie," is a niece of Captain Turner.

Among his brother captains in the Atlantic trade William T. Turner is looked upon as a first class navigator, a thorough seaman and the master of his ship. He may be classed as one of the last of the old school of mariners who were taught the sea in sailing ships. Although he commanded one of the finest ships in the world Captain Turner is one of the most democratic commanders afloat today.

Other Officers of the Liner.

Jaes A. McCubbin, the purser of the Lusitania, is the senior purser of the Cunard fleet and has been in the company's service for thirty-five years, during which he has become known to thousands of Americans. F. Draper is the assistant purser, and has a staff of four clerks in the office to assist in making out the manifests and ship's papers.

Dr. J. F. McDermott is a junor surgeon in the Cunard and was sent to the Lusitania to take the place of Dr. James Pointon, senior surgeon of the fleet who was laid up with rheumatism. J. Gerry is the assistant surgeon. Fred V. Jones, the chief steward, who was transferred from the Mauretania to the Lusitania, is one of the most popular chief stewards in the Atlantic service, and has been about twenty years with the Cunard Line.

171 ABOARD WERE AMERICANS.

Nationalities of First and Second Cabin Passengers Announced.

The first and second class passengers on the Lusitania, according to the Cunard office here, are divided into the following nationalities: British, 700; American, 171; Dutch, 5; Russian, 3; Greek, 3; Swedish 1; Mexican, 1; Swiss, 1; Italian, 1.

A table was prepared showing the nationality of the third-class passengers, bupt it was made on the assumption that the third-class passeengers of the Cameronia had been tionalities who, it was learned later, had not gone aboard the Lusitania. All of those who left on the Lusitania were provided with passports from their Consular representatives, which had been approved by the British Consulate here.

'DAMNABLE!' SAYS SUNDAY.

Evangelist Hotly Denounces the Torpedoing of the Lusitania.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, May 7.—Told this afternono of the sinking of the Lusitania Billy Sunday flew into a rage and condemned the act as "damnable and hellish." He said:

"It's damnable, damnable; absolutely hellish. Such work deserves the righteous condemnation of every God-fearing person in Chritendom. I'd say the same thing if England did it instead of Germany. To think—only to think—that in these supposed civilized days any nation would endanger the lives of thousands of Christians simply because they were under an enemy's flag. Hellish."

Sunday's sermon today, "Modern Amusements," was delivered at both the afternon and evening services. Record crowds were there to hear his arraignment of the theatre, dancing, especially the modern kind, and card playing. 10,500 crowding in the Tabernacle in the afternoon and more than 12,000 the record since the opening of the campaign—forcing their way inside the doors in the evening. More than 5,000 were turned away and many were seated in the aisles down in the sawdust. A total of 593 hit the trail.

Collections today amounted to $1,115.88, making a total for the campaign of $26,487.57.

LINER AND CARGO WORTH $10,735,579

VALUE OF CARGO $735,579

Half the Guarantees on It Taken by Companies in New York, the Rest by Lloyds.

Hendon Chubb of Chubb & Son, marine underwriters, said yesterday that had the Lusitania been outward bound at the time of the attack the insurance companies' loss might have been increased greatly by shipments from England of gold and securities. As it was, she carried only about 1,500 tons of cargo, valued at $735,579. The principal items were meant for war consumption, including sheet brass, valued at $50,000; copper and copper wire, $32,000; beef, $31,000; furs, $119,000; copper manufactures, $21,000; military goods, $66,000, and ammunition, $200,000.

The mammoth liner's hull was valued at $6,500,000 and fittings increased her cost to nearly $10,000,000, so that the ship and cargo sunk off the coast of Ireland represented $10,735,579.

In addition to her usual insurance on the value of $7,500,000 at 3 per cent., the Lusitania carried an additional war risk at 1¼ per cent. for each round voyage. It is understood that the Cunard Line carried one-third of the insurance, the rest being divided among Lloyds and other underwriters.

About half the insurance written on the vessel's cargo was taken by local companies, the rest being carried by Lloyds. The rate was low, 1 per cent., which was based on the theory that the Lusitania was too fast to be caught by a submarine. It was thought by Mr. Chubb that developments would show the attack was made by more than one submarine, a contingency which the insurance men apparently had not taken into consideration. On the slower steamships under the British flag a rate as high as 1½ per cent. has been charged. On American vessels bound through the war zone the rate has been one-quarter to one-half of 1 per cent. for war risks.

The first risk accepted after the news of the Lusitania disaster reached this country was on a slower English vessel, and the insurance was taken at 2 per cent. It was said that rates were not being quoted, but would be made to fit individual shipments regardless of possible further successes by the German submarines.

STOCKS COLLAPSE ON LUSITANIA NEWS

BETHLEHEM OFF 29 POINTS

Bankers Come to the Rescue with Supporting Orders for Big Blocks, Quickly Turning the Tide.

Panic conditions reigned in the stock market for a half hour yesterday afternoon following the receipt of dispatches confirming earlier reports that the Lusitania had been sunk. Stocks of all classes were thrown overboard in lots ranging from 100 to 5,000 shares each, and prices broke down with gaps of as much as 3 points frequently occurring between sales. Bethlehem Steel, which in the morning had sold up to 159, a new high record, slid downward rapidly until 140 was touched around 2:10 o'clock. The next sale was of 500 shares at 130, full ten points below its quotation a moment before, and thereafter the stock leaped about in a fashion to bewilder the most seasoned follower of market fortunes.

On the floor of the Exchange excitement gripped the brokers to a degree that had not been witnessed since the world was dumping its securities into New York last July, after England had declared war. The reporters who keep record of transactions at the different posts were swept off their feet in the swirling crowds of men. The ticker was worked at maximum speed, but was constantly ten or twelve minutes behind, a fact that caused much exasperation in brokerage offices. Numerous selling orders for Westinghouse, for instance, were placed when the tape recorded quotations high in the 90s, whereas the market at the moment had declined far below 90, and the sellers were forced to accept prices sometimes as many as 10 points under the expected figure. When quotations turned upward toward the close the reverse of this abnormal condition occurred and brought better prices than sellers had thought possible from the reading or the tape. At the period of greatest selling pressure it was said on the floor of the Exchange that prices for Westinghouse were being sent out fully twenty minutes after sales actually had taken place.

The sharp increase of business when selling became violent took many of the brokers around the busiest posts fairly off their feet. The pace was faster, than some of the old-time Exchange members had ever followed before.

The last hour brought a turnover in excess of 600,000 shares, which was more than half of the entire total of transactions during the session. Mistakes were made in the execution of orders, and this added to the general feeling of depression which pervaded the brokerage offices.

Many Heavy Declines.

Some of the largest declines from the best to the lowest prices of the day were 29 points in Bethlehem Steel, 21 points in Westinghouse, 11¾ points in Amalgamated Copper, 7 points in General Motors, and 6¾ points in Union Pacific. Banking support was accorded when it became clear that selling was getting out of hand, and in final transactions quotations moved with considerable vigor well up from the depths.

Market Ignored Early Rumors.

A curious factor of the day's work was the apparent indifference with which rumors of the Lusitania's sinking were received by the market before the Cunard officials announced the catastrophe. As early as 10:45 o'clock vague stories were passed around by the cable clerks of at least one big international banking house that the steamer had been sent to the bottom. The story was quickly transmitted to the floor of the Exchange, but met with a cold reception. Business drifted along in rather slack fashion as to volume, although with a general firm tone of prices, until about 1:30 o'clock, when a statement from the Cunard office was sent out over the news tickers saying briefly that a rumor had been cabled from London that the Lusitania had been torpedoed.

Thereafter selling began to increase, but did not reach sufficient volume to weaken prices substantially for some time. In fact, Bethlehem Steel reached its highest point after many brokers had begun to wonder whether there was not some degree of truth in the reports.

Shortly before 2 o'clock the news ticker confirmed the report of the sinking of the vessel. The slaughter of quoted values began at once. The demand for stocks contracted as the urgency of sales gained force. Brokers reported that short sales supplied a comparatively small part of the total.

The selling represented mostly an outpouring of orders from frightened holders of "long" stock, who feared that international complications would result from the act of the German submarine. The further the decline went the greater it was accelerated through the uncovering of stop loss orders and the forced selling of stock on weakly margined accounts.

Market Closes with Rally.

Around 2:30 o'clock thefall was checked abruptly. Orders to buy blocks of 2,000 to 5,000 shares were hurried into the market, and the effect was immediate. Recoveries were general throughout the list, the vigor of the upturn in late dealings being displayed in a rise from the bottom of 1¾ points in fifty average issues that the international situation had not been affected by the loss of the ship. As to the tremendous decline of the day, it was generally considered to be due as much to the unexpected news itself as to the implied complications of a sort to depress securities values. The opinion of bankers the market had been carried into a vulnerable position through speculation for the rise during April and a part of March, and toppled of its own weight when selling appeared in quantity.

VICTOR RIDDER REGRETS IT.

But Says the Attack Was Justifiable—Dernburg Silent.

Victor Ridder, son of Herman Ridder, when he was asked yesterday about the sinking of the Lusitania, held that it was justifiable, although he admitted that it would have no material bearing upon the outcome of the war. It was justifiable, he said, as a reprisal on England's blockade of Germany.

"I am very sad," said Mr. Ridder, "as I hear of the loss of the Lusitania, but I still hope to hear there was no loss of life. It seems impossible that so great a ship could be sunk without loss of life. Personally I feel the same as I did when the news came of the loss of the Titanic.

"It is greatly to be regretted as the sinking of the ship has no material bearing on the war, one way or the other. At the same time, we Germans feel that he attack was justifiable, but entirely as a reprisal. England's efforts to starve out the German nation, and inevitably any Americans or neutrals, who may be in the country, is a good reason for German reprisals against England. If the English would lift their embargo on food supplies for Germany, then there would be no reason for the reprisals.

"Furthermore, sufficient warning was given by Germany that Americans, going into the war zone on British ships would do so at their own risk, much as if they went on a British battleship. It is a difficult matter to give warning after passengers are aboard the ship, for submarine commanders have no means of knowing whether the ship attacked carries a gun. Ordinary rapid firing guns can sink a submarine.

"My emotions are rather conflicting concerning the Lusitania's loss. Personally I deeply regret it and no German is doing such things because he wants to. Yet we cannot help feeling that at this time it was justifiable."

LIKE THE TITANIC DISASTER.

Crowds of Women Await News of Crew at Liverpool.

LIVERPOOL, May 7.—Scenes reminiscent of the Titanic and the Empress of Ireland disasters were to be witnessed in Liverpool tonight, where a large crowd, chiefly women relatives of the crew of the Lusitania, gathered outside the Cunard office anxiously awaiting the news of their men.

Little was available, however, but the people remained calm, although the strain was terrible.

So far as could be learned here tonight the Lusitania had no guns aboard.

DISASTER BEARS OUT EMBASSY'S WARNING

German Advertisement Practically Foretold Lusitania's Fate on Day She Sailed.

AND IS REPEATED TODAY

Passengers Also Said to Have Received Telegrams — Shipping Men Heard of Threats.

That the Germans intended to make an effort to sink the Lusitania had been the common impression in shipping circles for weeks. When the German Embassy advertisement, warning Americans not to go to Europe aboard vessels flying the British flag, was printed last Saturday many professed to see in that warning the promise of an early attempt on the part of German submarines to send the great Cunarder to the bottom.

The German Embassay advertisement appeared in the newspapers the day that the Lusitania left New York on her last voyage. Its appearance naturally attracted wide attention, and there was much apprehension felt among those shipping men who had maintained from the first that the Lusitania, despite her great speed, was not immune from submarine attack. A torpedo, they said, could travel faster than any ship, and should the Lusitania or any other liner pass within short range of a submarine all the speed in the world could not set those ships out of the way of a properly aimed Whitehead torpedo.

Advertisement Appears Again.

The German Embassy advertisement which it may be noted appears in THE NEW YORK TIMES for a second time this morning, and which caused so many persons to have what is sometimes termed "a hunch" that all would not go well with the great liner, reads:

NOTICE.

Travelers intending to embark on the Atlantic voyage are reminded that a state of war exists between Germany and her allies and Great Britain and her allies; that the zone of war includes the waters adjacent to the British Isles; that in accordance with formal notice given by the Imperial German Government, vessels flying the flag of Great Britain or of any of her allies are liable to destruction in those waters and that travelers sailing in the war zone on ships of Great Britain or of her allies do so at their own risk.

IMPERIAL GERMAN EMBASSY.

Washington, D. C., April 22, 1915.

The Lusitania sailed from New York at 12:20 P. M. a week ago today, and the insertion of the advertisement was the subject of most of the conversations of those aboard her, as well as their friends and others who had gone to the pier to wish them a safe voyage. The passengers for the most professed to have no fear that the Lusitania was running any danger, and not one, so far as is known, canceled his passage because of the German Embassy's warning.

Expected a Convoy.

Charles P. Sumner, the General Agent in New York of the Cunard Line, was on the pier when the Lusitania sailed, and when asked if he considered that the German warning placed the Lusitania in peril, he replied that he did not. As for submarines, he added that he had no fear of them whatever, pointing out at the same time "there is a general system of convoying British ships," and adding that the British Navy was responsible for all British ships and "especially for Cunarders."

"The Germans," said Mr. Sumner, "have been trying to spoil our trade for some time. I anticipate that from this time on every German method that can be devised will be used to keep people from traveling on our ships."

Just before the Lusitania sailed there was a report that some of the passengers had received warnings in the form of unsigned telegrams that it would be best for them to sail by some other vessel than the Lusitania, and that the Lusitania would be torpedoed when she neared or got into European waters.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt was said to have received one of these warning telegrams. The anonymous sender of the Vanderbilt warning was said to have worded the warning in this way:

"Have it on definite authority that the Lusitania is to be torpedoed. You had better cancel passage immediately."

Several other passengers were reported to have received similarly worded warnings, but none of them took the matter seriously and all refused to become alarmed.

Denied by Line's Agents.

When officials of the Cunard Line were questioned concerning these reported anonymous telegrams they said that investigation of the rumor was made before the liner sailed and that it was ascertained that not one of the passengers named had received any of any kind from any source as to any danger traveling by the Lusitania might entail. This denial was repeated at the Cunard Line offices yesterday.

After the Lusitania sailed, and up to the moment it became known that she had been torpedoed, reports were current that the Germans were about to deliver their heaviest blow against British transatlantic shipping.

A few days ago it was stated by a man who had followed the submarine activities of the Germans closely that the Germans would get her before three weeks. He said he did not expect the attempt to be made until the German Embassy advertisement had appeared three times, as promised, in the American newspapers. Similar prophecies came to the ears of at least one leading shipping man in New York, and there is reason to believe that London was informed of these gloomy forecasts concerning the safety of the big liner.

Following the fire on the French liner Touraine, which it was asserted was started by a German agent on board the ship, all ships flying the flags of the Allied nations have been closely inspected before sailing from New York. Al these lines are maintaining a secret service of their own and every passenger who is not known to the agents of the line, or their secret service men, is carefully scrutinized before and after boarding outbound vessels.

OTHER LINERS LOST IN WAR.

Oceanic Ran Ashore and Kaiser Wilhelm Was Sunk by Cruiser.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The Lusitania is the third big transatlantic liner lost since the war started. The two others were the White Star liner Oceanic, wrecked off the north coast of Scotland Sept. 8 last, and the North German Lloyd steamer Kaiser Wilhelm der Grosse, converted into a German auxiliary cruiser and sunk by the British cruiser Highflyer Aug. 27.

A big liner became the mammoth Cunarder Aquitania, was severely damaged in a collision with the Leyland liner Canadian off the Irish coast in the latter part of last August.

INQUIRERS BESIEGE CUNARD OFFICE HERE

different hotels and boarding houses, but cannot give a list of the survivors, as the passengers are in such a state that their immediate wants must first be considered.

CUNARD, Liverpool.

Denial by Mr. Stone.

The first inquirers were assured by clerks at the Cunard office that there had been no loss of life for the reason that Charles P. Sumner, General Manager of the Cunard Line in Aerica, had received word from Melville E. Stone, General Manager of The Associated Press, that the Lusitania had been beached, and that all on board had been saved. This, according to employes in the Cunard offices, had been corroborated by Lloyds. Later in the afternoon Mr. Stone sent out a denial of this story from The Associated Press offices.

Inquiries were made from the Cuban Consulate for Julian de Ayala, Consul General for Cuba at Liverpool, who sailed on the Lusitania, and from a representative from the headquarters of the Carranzistas in this city. There were inquiries for Frederic G. Padilla, Consul General for Mexico at Liverpool, who also was on the Lusitania.

Many inquiries came in the afternoon for the safety of Charles Frohman. One of the first long-distance calls was an inquiry about Lady Allan and her two daughters. Reassuring replies were made to all these messages. Because of the optimistic reports in the day there were only a few inquiries in the evening, most of them by telephone.

More Rescues Reported.

At 10:42 o'clock at night the Cunard office received the following from Liverpool:

Mrs. J. T. Smith and George Kessler are safe.

Mr. Kessler is George A. Kessler of the wine importing firm of George A. Kessler & Co., at 20 Beaver Street. The woman mentioned is on the passenger list as Miss Jessie Taft Smith of Bracesville, Ohio.

At 10:45 the following cablegram was received from the Liverpool office:

General Lassetter's wift and son are safe.

The wife and son of General Harry Beauchamp Lassetter of Sydney, Australia, were on their way to England, after a long visit with relatives at Los Angeles. General Lassetter has been promoted to the rank of General since the war began. Before the war, he was Colonel in command of the Second Australian Light Horse Brigade.

In This Season of Shifting Standards

ONE looks across the seas—and wonders.

* *

For we will see more of one another this Summer than ever before, even though our thoughts be serious.

Those who spend moderately are looking at values more than ever.

* *

With both classes, Weber and Heilbroner

Summer suits at $20 to $40 represent the golden mean.

* *

The "TAIHO" Straw Has Struck Broadway

THE "TAIHO" straw hat—pronounced as if it were spelled "Ty-Ho"—strikes the keynote for the new Weber and Heilbroner straw hat season.

* *

That season officially opens today. You can now don your new straw without feeling like a stranger in a strange land.

* *

It literally means "great gun"—and this new braid is the great gun of the straw hat world.

It is a medium rough sennit, "picked up" by hand, giving it distinction from a machine-pressed hat, which always looks painfully perfect.

Weber and Heilbroner have the exclusive

Price, in several different proportions, $3.

* *

Here also is New York's representative assortment of smooth sennits, splits, mackinaws, Leghorns, Milans, Madagascars, Panamas and Bankoks, $2 to $50. Golf or motoring headwear in silk, felt and madagascar, 50 cents to $3.

VANDERBILT LEFT HIS WIFE AT HOME

Wealthiest Youth in America Expected to Make Only a Short Stay Abroad.

BEST KNOWN AS HORSEMAN

Inherited $100,000,000 and Married Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim When Ellen French Divorced Him.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt inherited the bulk of the estate left by his father, Cornelius Vanderbilt, and which was said to have been from $70,000,000 to $100,000,000. Cornelius, the elder brother, had been cut off in his father's will with $1,000,000. Later Alfred gave his brother $6,000,000 and the will was not contested. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Sr., had never forgiven his eldest son for marrying Miss Grace G. Wilson against his wishes.

Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt was born in this city on Oct. 20, 1877, and was educated at St. Paul's School at Concord, N. H., and Yale University, from which he was graduated in 1899. While he was elected a Director in some of the corporations in which his father was interested, he soon became more prominently know in the social life of this city and Europe as a horseman. While he was a student at Yale there were rumors that Mr. Vanderbilt was engaged to Miss Ellen French, daughter of Francis Ormonde French. A month after his graduation Mr. Vanderbilt started with a party of friends for a trip around the world, which he said would take tko years. He had reached Japan when his father died, and he hurried back to this city.

Richest Youth in America.

When the will was read Mr. Vanderbilt found himself at the time the richest young man in America. The money did not become his absolutely at the time, however. Half of it—property and securities valued at more than $30,000,000—was paid over to him when he reached the age of 30, and the will provided that the rest should be his when he became 35.

His engagement to Miss French, who had also inherited many millions from her father, culminated in their marriage on Jan. 15, 1901, in the Zabriskie Memorial Church, Newport, by the Rev. George Brinley Morgan, cousin of Miss French, and the Rev. Charles E. Beattie, rector of the church. Miss French was given in marriage by her brother, Amos Tuck French, father of Miss Julia Estelle French, who later surprised the Newport set by marrying Jack Geraghty, the son of a liveryman. Miss Ellen French's maid of honor was Miss Gladys Vanderbilt, now the Countess Széchenyi, and Reginald Vanderbilt was his brother's best man.

Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt celebrated their fifth wedding anniversary in Newport with a family dinner, but it was not many months before rumors of a separation were heard, and on April 1, 1908, Mrs. Vanderbilt began her suit for divorce. David McClure was made referee and the evidence was taken in secret. The name of the co-respondent was not made public, but the name of Mrs. Agnes Ruiz, wife of Antonio Ruiz, former attaché of the Cuban Legation in London, was mentioned in the mase. The divorce was granted and the papers were sealed. The wife took the name of Mrs. French Vanderbilt.

Coaching Ventures Abroad.

After his divorce Mr. Vanderbilt spent much of his time abroad, particularly in connection with his coaching ventures and the International Horse Show. Some time before he had become one of the most prominent horsemen in America, his horses copeting and winning blue ribbons at every show of iportaance in the country. They also competed with success in London.

As a breeder of fine stock at Oakland Farm, near Newport, he spent much time and money in reviving interest in coaching. He started a coach line between London and Brighton, which attracted much attention at the time. As an automobilist he also figured prominently and imported costly machines and spent much money in breaking records.

The affairs of Mr. Vanderbilt also received much attention again when it became known in June, 1909, that Mrs. Agnes Ruiz, whose name had been mentioned in the Vanderbilt divorce case, had committed suicide in London. There was much publicity attached to this tragedy, and it became known that soon after the Vanderbilt divorce, Mrs. Ruiz had been divorced from her husband. She died on May 16 of that year, but the fact that she had ended her life did not became known until nearly a month later.

Mr. Vanderbilt married Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim in London on Dec. 17, 1911. He had first become acquainted with Mrs. McKim when she entered the Newport set. She had one of the finest suites in the Plaza and a country place at Irvington, which was her father's present when she married Dr. McKim. The McKims had a residence in Newport three doors away from that of William K. Vanderbilt. Mrs. McKim announced that she was going to live apart from her husband, and asked for a divorce in Reno on April 30, 1910. Mrs. McKim announced that Mr. Vanderbilt did not enter into the case, and that she was basing her complaint on grounds of drunkenness and cruelty. Mrs. McKim was a daughter of Captain Isaac E. Emerson of Baltimore, who was divorced by his wife.

Married Mrs. McKim in England.

There were persistent rumors at this time that Mr. Vanderbilt and Mrs. McKim would marry. In October, 1910, after a trip to Japan, Mrs. McKim came to this city and Mr. Vanderbilt also came here. Both stayed at the Plaza, and they were much in each other's company. Mr. Vanderbilt leased the home of Mrs. Ernesto G. Fabbri at 11 East Sixty-second Street of Nov. 9, 1910. In the meantime there had been reports that Dr. McKim contemplated suit against Mr. Vanderbilt or Captain Emerson or both for the alienation of Mrs. McKim's affections, and later substance was given to these rumors by the announcement that a settlement had been arranged by which Dr. McKim agreed to abandon any idea of legal proceedings, growing out of the divorce which his wife had obtained in Reno.

Then was started a report that Mr. Vanderbilt was to marry Mrs. George Law, to whom he also had been attentive. Mrs. Law sailed hastily for Europe.

The wedding of Mr. Vanderbilt and Mrs. McKim on Dec. 17, 1911, however, took their friends by surprise. It was performed in the Registry office in Reigate, a small town twenty-five miles from London. The secret was so well guarded that no one outside the two principals and the four witnesses, besides the Registry officials, was present.

It was in 1908 that Mr. Vanderbilt started every one talking in London by operating his coach line between London and Brighton over the Brighton Road. Stories about the first trip, made on April 22, 1908, were cabled to this country, and the coach meteor won world-wide publicity. Mr. Vanderbilt said it was "one of the greatest days of my life."

Member of Many Clubs.

Mr. Vanderbilt's two sons are William Henry, born Nov. 24, 1901, and Alfred Gwynne, Jr., born Sept. 22, 1912. He was elected to these clubs: Piping Rock, Knickerbocker, Riding, Metropolitan, New York Yacht, Meadowbrook, The Brook, Turf and Field, Ardsley, Automobile of America, and Yale. He was elected a Director in these corporations: Fulton Navigation Company, Raquette Lake Railway Company, Raquette Lake Transportation Company, and the Fulton Chain Railway Company.

Mr. Vanderbilt was not accompanied by his wife when he sailed on the Lusitania. He expected to make only a short stay abroad.

THOUGHT STEWARDS STRUCK.

Crowd Sees Parade at the Cunard Line Office.

While the excitement over the Lusitania was at its height in the Cunard office at 5 o'clock yesterday afternoon, tweney-five cooks and stewards, in their working clothes, marched in a procession amid the crowd of people who were seeking information from the clerks. At first it was reported that the Italians had struck on board the Cunard steamship Carpathia because they were afraid that the ship would be blown up like the Lusitania.

One of the managers of the Cunard Line explained that the Carpathia, which arrived here three days ago from the Mediterranean, had been chartered by the Admiralty to carry Canadian troops from Montreal to England. On this account the Italian part of the crew were ordered to be paid off here and sent back to Naples. Their places will be taken by Englishmen who are coming out on the Saxonia, which arrives here on Tuesday under command of Captain J. W. T. Charles, formerly commander of the Mauretania.

DOUBT ONE TORPEDO SANK THE CUNARDER

Washington Suggests She Was Hit More Than Once—Perhaps Ammunition Blew Up.

HAD A LARGE CARGO ABOARD

Officers Expect England Will Now Demand Energetic Offensive by the Fleet.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Naval officers here think the Lusitania was struck by more than one torpedo, if, as reported, she remained afloat only thirty minutes after the first explosion. The ship was so constructed, they say, that except under extraordinary condition a single torpedo could not sink her.

It was pointed out, however, that inside explosions following the attack might have aided in the work of destruction, as the ship is understood to have carried a large amount of war material for the Allies, including ammunition. Such explosions might have ripped open several compartments and so weakened others that they gave way under the pressure of inrushing water.

Some navy officers thought they saw in the warnings published in this country before the departure of the steamer that she would be attacked an intimation that the ship would be blown up from the inside during her voyage.

If all the passengers and crew of the ship were removed in boats after she was torpedoed, the officers and crew of the Lusitania accomplished an almost impossible task, some officers said. The ship carried the full complement of boats, both of the regular and collapsible type, and of life rafts required under American navigation laws.

A place for every person aboard the ship in lifeboats was assured, it is said, and undoubtedly all boats were swung out and provisioned as soon as the steamer cleared New York Harbor and remained so all the way across. It was suggested, however, that the task of getting into the boats nearly 2,000 persons, many of them women, hardly seemed possible of accomplishment in thirty minutes.

Officials recall that at the time of the Titanic disaster engineers said a similar accident to the Lusitania would have left the ship afloat and able to proceed under her own steam. She was a double-skinned vessel, with many water-tight subdivisions of her hold, and wing-bulkhead installations that gave added protection. The vessel's coal bunker lay outside these bulkheads, and it was held that the most powerful torpedo known could not tear open enough compartments to send the ship to the bottom.

Expect Demand that Fleet Act.

Navy officers predicted that one effect of the loss of the Lusitania would be a popular demand in England for energetic action by the fleet.

Some State Department officials were inclined to credit the reports that a German base for submarine raids had been established in a hidden cove, known only to native smugglers on the Irish coast.

The torpedoing of the British superdreadnaught Audacious off the Irish coast, generally supposed to have been the work of a German submarine, numerous raids on smaller craft in the same region and now the sinking of the Lusitania, in the opinion of these officials, indicated clearly that the German underwater craft were working from a nearby point.

Navy officials, however, did not share this view. They pointed out that the Lusitania was struck at a distance of less than 1,500 miles from the German coast. This would be easy cruising distance, it was said, for the newest American submarines.

Information has reached the Navy Department to the effect that some German submarines have circumnavigated the British Isles, making voyages of 5,000 or 6,000 miles. If this is true, and the report was apparently accepted at face value, the underwater ambuscade to which the Lusitania fell victim was a very simple matter.

Germany is known to have put in commission several new submarine craft recently, and it was thought by navy officials that when the plan to sink the Lusitania was drawn up, it was decided to send several of these boats into the track which the liner would follow, to lie in wait for her. Judging by reports of her position at the time of the attack, it was said, the Lusitania followed her regular course on her last voyage.

NOTHING TO CAUSE EXPLOSION

Only Some Cases of Small-Arm Ammunition on Board.

Captain D. J. Roberts, Marine Superintendent of the Cunard Line, said last night that there were some cases of small arms ammunition in the hold of the Lusitania, but nothing that would be likely to cause an explosion. She also carried a few hundred cases of empty shells for the big guns, which were taken over on every ship, and were quite harmless.

The Lusitania carried only a small mail—about 250 bags—and no specie. Several stewards were shipped in New York on account of her having more cabin passengers than expected when the ship left Liverpool.

MANY NEW YORKERS SAILED ON LUSITANIA

Charles Klein, Elbert Hubbard, and Justus Miles Forman on Passenger List.

HAD NO FEAR OF ATTACK

Most of the Travelers Were on Their Usual Lines of Business or Pleasure.

There were many prominent New Yorkers on the Lusitania when she sailed on Saturday for England. None of them seemed greatly alarmed by the warning issued by the German Government, and scouted the idea that the big liner would be attacked. The passenger list contains the names of about one hundred who registered from this city.

Charles Klein, who was on board, arrived here on April 15, coming from London on the White Star liner Adriatic. He announced that he had come to collaborate with Montague Glass on a new play to be named "Potash & Perlmutter in Society." He said he intended to stay here for a few weeks and then return to London to work on the new drama that he was writing, and had promised to have ready by January next.

During his stay here he was in conference with Selwyn & Co., and delivered to them the manuscript of a new play for Julian Eltinge called "Cousin Jane," and of "The Guilty Man."

Mr. Klein has lived alternately here and in London since the beginning of the war and was in England when the war began. In the confusion of the first recruiting he was drafted into the special police service in London, which was then filled with a million soldiers.

He was born in London in 1867 and educated at North London College. Before he became actively interested in the stage he was prominent as an amateur actor and as a close student of the drama. His reputation in this regard became known over here and when Mr. Klein first came to this city he was employed by Charles Frohman as a play reader.

Klein's Theatrical Successes.

His first play, "A Mile a Minute," was produced in 1890, and was followed two years later by "By Proxy." In 1893 "A Paltry Million" was produced, and then two years later came "The District Attorney," which was followed by "Dr. Belgraff" and "Heartsease," both of which were produced in 1896. The latter play was written in collaboration with J. I. C. Clarke. Mr. Klein then spent two years working on his next play, "The Hon. John Grigsby," which appeared in 1898. In 1900 "The Cipher Code" was produced, and a year later came "The Auctioneer."

Then three years after this came his great success, "The Music Master," in which David Warfield became a famous star. This play is known to practically every theatre-goer in the United States. In 1905 his play, "The Lion and the Mouse" was produced, and this was followed by "The Daughters of Men" in 1906, "The Step-Sister" in 1907, and "The Third Degree" in 1908. This play also became famous, as it was an exposé of the police methods in vogue in this city, which at that time were under severe criticism.

A year later "The Next of Kin" was produced, and in 1912 he adapted the "Ne'er Do Well." Mr. Klein is also the author of many librettos, among which are "The American Countess," "The Charlatan," "A Royal Rogue," "Mr. Pickwick," and "The Red Feather."

He is Secretary of the American Dramatists' Society and an officer in the Authors' Producing Company. Mr. Klein married Miss Lillian Gottlieb, who was a play reader for Charles Frohman, and has one son, Philip, who is associated with various theatrical enterprises here. He is a brother of Herman Klein, who was a vocal teacher in this city for many years and now lives in London. Another of his brothers is Manuel Klein, who was musical director of the Hippodrome and wrote the music of most of the big productions in that playhouse.

Mr. Klein's home in this country is at Rowayton, Conn., and in London at 8 Netherhall Gardens, Hampstead, N.W.

Elbert Hubbard Aboard.

Elbert Hubbard, one of the most prolific of the popular writers and lecturers in America was aboard the Lusitania. He was born in Bloomington, Ill., on June 19, 1859, the son of Dr. Silas Hubbard. He received a common school education, and in 1899 was awarded an honorary Master of Arts Degree by Tufts College, Boston.

The name of Elbert Hubbard for years has been identified with "Philistine," "Little Journeys," "Roycroft," and East Aurora, N. Y., where Mr. Hubbard has lived and from which place his many publications and the products of the Roycroft Shop have been distributed.

It was as the editor of The Philistine that "Fra Elburtus," as Mr. Hubbard styled himself, first attracted wide attention. In his earlier years he worked as a farmer, laborer, shepherd, and miner, and then he became in succession a printer, a newspaper reporter, and a dramatic critic, gradually, it would seem, approaching the independent and unusual literary life in which he became popular. It was while he was traveling for a business house that he "discovered" East Aurora, which is sixteen miles from Buffalo. He founded The Philistine there in 1894, and, meeting with success, opened the Roycroft shop for the printing of the little monthly.

While editing the Philistine, Mr. Hubbard wrote essays, most of which have been published as "Little Journeys" to the homes of authors, musicians, artists, philosophers, &c.

Opinions of the excellence of the work furthered and fostered by Mr. Hubbard have differed, but there has been no question about its unusualness. Both in his treatment of subjects and the physical mediums through which he had presented what he has to say, Mr. Hubbard has been striking.

Odd Dress Affected.

In personal appearance, Mr. Hubbard has been as unusual as his work. He has affected a modified Western style of dress, which, with his rather long hair and personal mannerisms, has marked him. But Mr. Hubbard has never been generally accepted simply as a eccentric literary man. His business sense has often been commented upon and, from the small beginning with the Philistine, he made himself practically the chief of a colony in East Aurora most of the members of which were his disciples.

In recent years Mr. Hubbard's name has been seen on many indorsements used by commercial firms as advertisements, and he has taken one side or another in many public discussions. This personal protaganism has been criticized in many places and has led to attacks on Mr. Hubbard. One of the strongest and most recent was in Harper's Weekly last January, when an article under the caption, "Elbert Hubbard's Price," correspondence was given between Mr. Hubbard and John D. Rockefeller, Jr., in which Mr. Hubbard volunteered to write articles about the Colorado mine situation supporting the employers. In concluding the article the writer said that Mr. Hubbard's proposal was "to sell his opinion and to make an investigation in support of that opinion."

Mr. Hubbard's first wife was Mrs. Bertha Crawford Hubbard, a member of prominent Illinois family, whom he married in 1881. The couple had four children and lived together, chiefly in East Aurora, until 1902, when Mrs. Hubbard began divorce proceedings that were ultimately successful. She obtained the care of the two children and alimony.

In the divorce suit Mrs. Hubbard named Miss Alice L. Smith, a school teacher, as co-respondent, and in 1903, the year following the divorce, Mr. Hubbard announced his engagement to her, describing her at the time as his affinity. The marriage followed shortly afterward.

It was recalled yesterday that, before sailing on the Lusitania, Mr. Hubbard, when told of the German warning, said that he had no fears, but that the Kaiser probably would like to make him "look like a piece of Swiss cheese" because of a recent article in which he referred to "William Hohenzollern" as the man "who lifted the lid from hell." The present Mrs. Hubbard, who was with her husband, also said that she had no fear of submarines.

Charles F. Fowles, who was on the Lusitania with his wife, is the Treasurer of the Scott & Fowles Company, interior decorators, at 590 Fifth Avenue. He lives at 1 West Sixty-fourth Street.

Ogden H. Hammond, who was on the Lusitania with his wife, is the Secretary and a Director of the Standard Plunger Elevator Company of 115 Broadway and a Director in the Bernardsville, N. J., National Bank and in the Hoboken Land and Improvement Company. His city residence is at 30 East Seventieth Street, but before sailing he took his three children to his country home in Bernardsville. It was said there last night that he and Mrs. Hammond had gone for their annual Summer trip abroad.

C. Cheever Hardwick, who lives in Oakwood Avenue, East Orange, N. J., is a member of the firm of Burr & Hardwick, importers, at 132 Fifth Avenue. It was said at his home last night that he had sailed for England on business.

A. L. Hopkins is the President of the Newport News Shipbuilding Dry Dock Company with offices at 233 Broadway. He lives at 270 Riverside Drive, where his wife said last night that she had had no word from him. The nature of his business abroad was not made public.

Thomas B. King, who lives in Grand View Avenue, Rye, N. Y., is a buyer for Brokaw Brothers. He was on his semi-annual business trip. He was on the Olympic last Fall when that ship rescued some of the crew of of the battleship Audacious and was later held in Loch Swilly.

Gerald A. Letts is an importer and dealer in antiques and rare art objects with a shop at 21 East Fifty-fifth Street. He is an Englishman, and sailed to join his wife at his home in London.

Allen D. Loney, retired from business, lives at the Hotel Gotham at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-seventh Street. Sailing with him were his wife and a maid and his daughter, Miss Virginia B. Loney. They had gone for their annual visit to England and France.

Herman A. Myers, another passenger, is head of the feather house of H. & E. & S. Myers of 684 Broadway. He sailed for London on business, and at the time didn't seem to think that there was the slightest danger of the Lusitania being torpedoed. At his home, 605 West 113th Street, it was said last night that no word had been received from him.

Dr. F. Warren Pearl, who was aboard the Lusitania, was arrested last Autumn by the Germans at Helsingfors, and was at that time detained for several days as a spy and locked in a prison. He has a house in London, and was going there with his wife, who was Miss Amy L. Duncan, a sister of Stuart Duncan; his daughter, Miss Amy W. W. Pearl, and his son, Stuart Duncan Pearl.

Dr. Pearl was a Surgeon Major in the Spanish-American war. He is prominently known here in society, and has a home at 123 East Thirty-sixth Street. The story of his arrest as a spy was told by Dr. Pearl when he got here in December last. Soon after the war began he said he had endeavored to go to Petrograd, but was detained at Helsingfors. The officers who examined his passports and his papers which showed the rank he held in the United States Army, refused to let him go and searched him closely, even knocking the heels from his shoes. Then he was thrown into a prison room and forced to keep the lights on all night so that he could be watched. A man was also hidden in the wardrobe to observe his actions.

Dr. Pearl said that he was not permitted to see the American Consul or to telegraph to his wife. For five days, he said, he was kept in prison with sixty-five Russians, and expected to be shot. Finally he was released and made his way to Copenhagen, after Ambassador Gerard had interceded for him.

Dr. F. S. Pearson, who sailed with his wife for a short visit to England, is President of the Pearson Engineering Corporation, Ltd., of 115 Broadway. Dr. Pearson has been active for years in the financing of railways and was associated with Percival Farquhar in some of his deals. He was interested largely in Mexican railways, notably the Mexico Northwestern system.

Edwin Perkins lived last Winter at the Hotel Van Rensselaer, 15 East Eleventh Street.

Max M. Schwarcz, senior member of the cloak firm of Max M. Schwarcz & Co., of 141 Madison Avenue, lives at 137 Riverside Drive. No word had been received from him last night.

Among those on the Lusitania, according to the passenger list, was Edgar Gorer of the firm Gorer of London, dealers in Chinese porcelain. Just before sailing he began suit in the Supreme Court here against Henry J. and Joseph J. Duveen of Duveen Brothers, art dealers, for $575,000 damages. In his suit against Joseph J. Duveen Mr. Gorer charges that Mr. Duveen adjudged as of modern make a Chinese porcelain vase of the Kang Hsi period, thereby preventing a sale to Henry C. Frick. His suit against Henry J. Duveen is based upon the single allegation that Mr. Duveen in January, 1914, said that a certain pair of green vases were modern and that Gorer knew it. Mr. Gorer's office in London is at 170 New Bond Street.

Mme. Marie Depage, wife of Dr. Antoine Depage, surgeon to King Albert and in charge of the entire field operations of the Belgian Red Cross, was among those on the Lusitania. She is returning to Belgium after two months spent here, during which time she visited many places and collected nearly $100,000 for the field hospital work of King Albert's army. Dr. Depage is known in this country, where he was the President of the International Congress of Surgery in this city last year. Just before she sailed on the Lusitania Mme. Depage said that she was anxious to get back to Flanders, where at La Panne, Dr. Depage has established his field hospital. As assistant to her husband Mme. Depage is the housekeeper of the hospital.

Among those for whom inquiries were made at the Cunard offices was Dr. T. Houghton, said by officials of the company to be the son of a former Supreme Court Justice. Dr. Houghton was on his way to Belgium to the war hospital at La Panne. Dr. Houghton had a premonition of disaster and before embarking he made his will. With him went his sister, Mrs. George Don. Both are residents of Troy and have many friends in this city.

Several inquiries were made also for Cyril H. Bretherton of Los Angeles, who went with his wife and two children for a visit to relatives in England. Prior to sailing he made a long visit in New York.

Among the Brooklyn people known to have been passengers on the Lusitania were Robert Ewart, 37 years old, of 1,331 Broadway, and James A. Leary, 38 years old, of 404 Eighth Avenue. Mr. Ewart is the manager of a branch store of the Great Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company. He started on a vacation last week, and was on his way to visit his mother in Ireland. Mr. Leary is a buyer for a Manhattan clothing house, and went abroad on business for his firm.

Miss Pauline Hutchinson is a niece of Robert A. Franks of Llewellyn Park, West Orange, a financial agent for Andrew Carnegie. Miss Hutchinson had spent two months at the Franks home and was returning to her relatives in Cheshire, England. She is about 20 years old.

Mr. and Mrs. Albert E. Veal were sailing for their home, outside of London, in company with Mrs. Veal's brother, Frederick R. Bailey. They had lived for three years in Orange, N. J.

Forman Going As Correspondent.

Justus Miles Forman, who sprang into the theatrical limelight recently as the author of "The Hyphen," which is now on at the Knickerbocker Theatre, was on his way to Europe as correspondent for several magazines. He was known for years as a writer of romantic novels and short stories, and to thousands who have not seen his first play, his name stands for entertaining fiction.

Mr. Forman was born in Le Roy, N. Y., Nov. 1, 1875, and was graduated until 1901 he attended the Ecole Julien, Paris, and from that time he traveled and wrote. He never married, and in recent years has maintained bachelor from Yale in 1898. From his graduation apartments at 14 East Thirty-seventh Street. He is a member of the Century and Yale Clubs.

As a traveler Mr. Forman has been energetic. He has journeyed extensively through Europe, Australia, New Zealand, and the South Pacific Islands. Much of the material in his novels and stories was gathered on these travels.

Mr. Forman's play, "The Hyphen," has been taken as an anti-German piece, or rather an attack on the German-Americans who have been active for the Fatherland. The author's sympathies for the Allies hve long been known to his friends, and they were not surprised, therefore, when the play appeared. They were surprised, however, that Mr. Forman should turn to playwriting, because he had never before been associated with the stage, except indirectly when a dramatization of one of his novels, "The Garden of Lies," done by himself in collaboration with Sidney Grundy, was produced at St. James's Theatre in London in 1905.

The novel of this play was published in 1902, and it was followed in 1903 by Journey and End. Mr. Forman's ability for rapid output may be seen from this list of his chief publications: Tommy Carteret, 1905; Buchanan's Wife, 1906; The Stumbling Block, 1907; Jason, 1909; Bianca's Daughter, 1910; The Unknown Lady, 1911; The Opening Door, 1913; Common Sense, 1914. In addition to these works, Mr. Forman has contributed frequently to Harper's, Collier's, McClure's and Windson, (London,) magazines.

Taste for Foreign Lands.

In his travels abroad Mr. Forman developed a taste for foreign countries, his chief interest centreing in France, England, and the East. He has been accustomed to spend much time at Chiddingford, Surrey, England, and in Paris, which is the scene of many of his novels and short stories. His inclination for the East is shown in the furnishing of his bachelor apartment. There Buddhas, Shinto gods, and Kwannons and kindred objects are in plenty, and in the midst of it all Mr. Forman has done much work sitting on a divan.

It has been Mr. Frohman's custom to spend six months of each year working in these quarters, and in that time he has generally completed a novel and a number of short stories. The other half of the year he has generally spent in England or traveling.

Mr. Forman's first appearance as an author was when he was studying art in Paris. He took it into his head one day, he said, to send "several fluffy little things" to Smart Set and his work was well received. In the first few years he often had as many as three stories in one issue of the magazine, using a separate name for each.

An unusual feature of Mr. Forman's work is that it is as popular in England as it is in America. The author's continental knowledge and appreciation enabled him to please Englishmen and Frenchmen as well as his compatriots.

Herbert S. Stone.

Herbert S. Stone, son of Melville E. Stone, of The Associated Press, whose address is given as 162 East Seventy-fourth Street, was on the passenger list. He is also known prominently socially in Chicago. He is a member of many clubs, among them the Manhattan, Players, the Brook and Church.

Lady Allan and Daughter.

Lady Allan, who was a passenger on the Lusitania with her two daughters, Miss Anna and Miss Gwen, is the wife of Sir Montagne Allan, one of the managing owners of the Allan Line which has had ships in service between for more than fifty years. Sir Montague came from Montreal with his family and accompanied them on board the Lusitania. He was one of the many who did not take the German warning seriously.

Commander Stackhouse.

Commander J. Foster Stackhouse, U. S. N., retired, who lives at the Lotos Club, sailed on the Lusitania in connection with his work for the Belgian Relief Commission. He said he expected to return in about two months. He had read the German advertisement that morning, but did not think it worthy of particular attention, as he thought the Lusitania too speedy for any submarine. He added that he did not believe the Germans would deliberately take a passenger liner that had Americans on board.

OUT-OF-TOWN PASSENGERS.

Many Cities Represented on the Lusitania's List.

Mr. and Mrs. Keser had been accustomed to go to Spain yearly until two years ago, when they visited Germany, as they did last ear. Mr. Keser's son is a student in the Law School at the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Keser was among the first who booked passage on the Lusitania. He was on business for the Philadelphia National Bank, but more than that officials of the bank would not say.

Mr. Hodges sailed, with his family, to Liverpool, en route for Paris. There he was to take permanent charge of the Baldwin offices in France, selling locomotives to the French Government and supervising the assembling of engines sent to that country knocked down. He had been the firm's Paris representative for six months, returning to this country a few weeks ago. When he sailed, with his family, on Saturday, he intended to make his home in Paris. He has been connected with the Baldwin works for fifteen years, and was their technical representative in China until a year ago. He was transferred to an office in Russia, and from there to Paris. Mrs. W. C. Hodges, Mr. Hodges's widowed mother, broke down and wept when told the ship had gone down.

William Stirling Hodges is 8 years old and Dean is 6. Before her departure Mrs. Hodges was asked whether she feared the trip. She laughed and said: "If we go down, we'll all go together."

Mr. Hodges was the organist in the Harper Memorial Presbyterian Church. He is 36 years old, and his wife, who was Miss Sarah Gressmer, is a year his junior.

David Todd sailed on the Lusitania to see his mother in Lincolnshire, England. He is 28 years old and had been in Philadelphia for two years. Until he left for England he was employed by George Hubert, a florist, at Fifty-fourth Street and Grays Avenue.

Miss May Davis, daughter of Mrs. Matilda Davis, with whom Todd boarded, was stunned when she was told this afternoon that the Lusitania had been sunk. "Mr. Todd left a photograph of himself with me when he sailed," said Miss Davis. "He said he was going to visit his mother in England and that he would write me frequently. I understood that he would return before the end of a year."

Mr. Knox went abroad on business. His wife and daughter remained at home. Mrs. Knox was at the Stevens School, 221 West Chelten Avenue, Germantown, this afternoon, attending a play given by the students, in which her daughter, Miss Jean Knox, was appearing. Miss Violet Oakley, the artist, and a friend of the family, heard of the sinking of the Lusitania, but she decided not to tell Mrs. Knox until after the entertainment. Mr. Knox is a native of Delaware and a former State Senator from Wilmington. As Republican leader, he ended the Addicks Senatorial deadlock in 1903, when the election of Senators Ball and Allee was brought about. He was always an active opponent of Addicks and became head of the shipbuilding company some years ago.

Mr. Compton is an Englishman, and he and his family were returning to England to make their home there. The house at St. Martin's had been shut up. At the Surpass Leather Company it was said that Mr. Compton had not given up his post with the concern.

Miss Allen, 29 years old, traveling with the Comptons, was graduated from the Girls' High School of this city, and from Mount Holyoke College, Holyoke, Mass.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles E. Robinson had given up their home in Germantown. Mr. Robinson intended to establish himself in the shoe business in England.

The Rev. B. W. Maturin, formerly rector of St. Clement's Episcopal Church, Twentieth and Cherry Streets, and now a priest of the Roman Catholic Church, occupied a cabin on the Lusitania. One week ago last Sunday he preached in St. Patrick's Church, Twentieth and Locust Streets.

Miss Pope of Hartford a Passenger.

Special to The New York Times.

HARTFORD, Conn., May 7.—Three persons from Hartford or its suburbs were aboard the Lusitania. No news has been received here concerning any of them, and the only answer that a message of inquiry to the State Department at Washington brought was a confirmation of the report that the vessel had been sunk and that the passengers were thought to have been saved. The passongers are Miss Theodate Pope and Proffessor Edwin W. Friend, both of Farmington, and Patrick J. McLoughlin of this city.

Miss Pope is one of the best-known women in Connecticut. She is a daughter of the late Alfred Pope, and is a landscape artist and architect of considerable reputation. She designed the buildings and grounds of the Westover School at Middlebury and many Connecticut estates. She has been an ardent suffragist and a progressive, and, being a woman of wealth, contributed largely to the Progressive Party funds in the last Presidential campaign. She is deeply interested in the study of psychic phenomena, and her trip to Europe was partly connected with this interest. She was to be a guest of Sir Oliver Lodge in England, and intended to study war conditions in Belgium.

Professor Friend is a Secretary of the Society for Psychic Research, with headquarters in New York, and a recognized authority on psychic phenomena, about which he has written much. His trip to Europe was with the view of getting data on certain psychic demonstrations in England. He was formerly a professor in a Western college, but has been living for the past year on the Pope estate in Farmington.

McLoughlin was formerly a waiter in a Hartford hotel. He has a wife and four children in Ireland, and was on his way to join them.

Henry B. Sonneborn, is in the coal business here and has interests in Paris, where he has made his home for three years. He is a son of Mrs. Wilhelmina Sonneborn, of Baltimore, who is very ill, and his sisters say that the strain has been sever eupon her nerves since the first report came that the Lusitania might be torpedoed. We was accompanied by Leo Schaarbecker of Peoria, Ill.

Captain Emerson, father of Mrs. Vanderbilt, called her by telephone at the Hotel Vanderbilt, New York, this afternoon and while Mrs. Vanderibilt said she had assurances that her husband was safe she was nervous, and prevailed upon her father to come to her at once. Captain Emreson left for New York on the 5 o'clock train.

Pittsburghers After Contracts.

PITTSBURGH, May 7.—According to steamship agents here, twenty persons from the Pittsburgh district had booked passage on the Lusitania. In the number were eight first cabin, nine second cabin, and three third cabin passengers.

C. O. Andrews, manager of the J. J. McCormick Agency, said he was not at liberty to give the names of some of the first-cabin passengers, as he had promised to withhold their names. He said, however, that among them were several prominent steel and iron manufacturers bound for Europe to close contracts.

Among the second and third cabin passengers from Pittsburgh on board the liner were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Brownlie, Miss Margaret S. Killy, Mrs. Margaret A. Anderson, Francis J. Lucas, Michael Ward, Charles D. Martin, Mrs. Jeannette Moses, and Miss Winifred Kilawee.

Street were among those on the Lusitania. Mr. Plamondon is President of the Plamondon Manufacturing Company, makers of machinery. Both are prominent in society. Mr. Plamondon belongs to the Chicago Athletic, Union League and South Shore Country Clubs, and Mrs. Plamondon to the Woman's Athletic. Their daughters are Mrs. John Henry Smith of Newark, N. J.; Mrs. Allen B. Ripley, and Miss Marie Plamondon; the sons, Charles A. Plamondon, Jr., and Harold M. Plamondon.

"Father had to go to England on business," said Miss Marie Plamondon this evening. "He thought the ocean was safe from submarines, but mother, who was staying with my sister at Newark, wouldn't let him go alone. She joined him at New York and sailed with him.

"They were going to London, thence to Dublin, to consult about father's business, and then to Manchester, where he was to direct the opening of work on a large malt house. They expected to return to America in a month. On the boat with them was Mrs. Faber, wife of the leading man in "The White Feather" Company, now at the Princess Theatre here."

Mrs. Faber is known on the English stage as Winifred Arthur Jones. She is a daughter of Henry Arthur Jones, the noted British playwright, and has appeared in many of her father's plays.

Mrs. Catherine E. Willey is the mother of Mrs. Robert J. Thorne of Lake Forest, Ill., wife of the Vice President of Montgomery, Ward & Co. She has lived at the Continental Hotel, Paris, for the last six years, and comes to Chicago each year to visit her daughter. She left Chicago on Wednesday, April 28, for France, where she planned to enter the Red Cross service.

Miss Agnes Crosbie, 24 years old, is a member of the family of Ainslie J. Bell of Wilmette, Ill. "Miss Crosbie was on her way to Scotland for a visit with relatives," said Mr. Bell. "I have made every effort to get into touch with her, but, from the communications I have received from the Cunard Company officials, I am inclined to believe she is safe."

William Mounsey, 4,420 Laporte Avenue, with his daughter and son-in-law, Mr. and Mrs. C. L. Lunn, were passengers on the Lusitania. They were en route to Liverpool to reclaim Mrs. Mounsey, who was reported lost on the Empress of Ireland a year ago, but who, it was said, had been traced recently to a sanitarium in Liverpool where she is in an enfeebled mental condition.

"Father had no premonition that anything would go wrong on this trip," declared William Mounsey, Jr., today. "He was so overjoyed at the prospect, faint as it was, that mother was to be rescued from the dead that he had not a moment's thought that a fate like hers would be also his.

"We have heard nothing. We are waiting anxiously for news."

Montague T. Grant, 1,412 Hyde Park Boulevard, accompanied by his wife, was on his way to Liverpool to visit three sisters whom he had not seen for many years. He is traveling salesman for the American Can Company.

Mr. and Mrs. George W. Bartlett, the latter a sister-in-law of Alfred S. Austrian, a well known Chicago attorney and member of the firm of Mayer, Meyer, Austrian & Platt, were returning to London after a visit to Chicago. Mrs. Austrian and Mrs. Bartlett are sisters.

Mrs. G. Marks and her daughter were returning to their home near Bristol, England, after a visit of one year with her sons, Gilbert and Joseph Marks of 1,008 Montrose Avenue. Mr. Marks, who accompanied his wife and daughter to Chicago, returned to England last December. Mr. Marks has not received any direct cabled word from his mother

Going to Report on Mexico.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN ANTONIO, Texas, May 7.—W. Broderick Cloete, who booked passage on the Lusitania from this city, made his business headquarters in San Antonio. He left for the East about two weeks ago, having come to this side in December last on the Lusitania. Mr. Cloete is a member of a London firm that has extensive holdings in the Mexican Republic in the way of mining properties and some plantations in the agricultural districts. Business in connection with these interests brought him to San Antonio, and he made several trips into the republic in recent months. He was on his way back to London to report on the Mexican situation. His home is on the outskirts of London, and it was his plan to speid the Summer there.

Among others on the Lusitania known in San Antonio was Federico G. Padilla, Mexican Consul General at Liverpool. He was on his way to Liverpool to take up his duties there in behalf of the Convention Government of the Republic. He is a brother of Fernando L. Padilla, who holds a similar office in San Antonio.

Two Aboard from Indiana.

INDIANAPOLIS, Ind., May 7.—Mr. and Mrs. E. Blish Thompson of Seymour, who were the only known Indiana people on the Lusitania, were on a business trip. Mr. Thompson is Secretary and Sales Manager of the Blish Milling Company of Seymour, and one of the primary objects of his trip was to see the firm's London agents in regard to a large contract of flour for a Holland company. Mrs. Thompson was formerly Miss Maude Robinson of Long Branch, N. J., a member of the "Prince of Pilsen" Company before her marriage in 1904.

Mr. McConnell is extensively interested in delta farm lands, and just before he left here had returned from Mississippi.

Harlan K. Bolton, Jr., is the son of Harlan K. Bolton, 1,411 North State Street. Mr. Bolton lived at the Blackstone Hotel when in Chicago.

One Chicagoan on the Lusitania was Patrick Callan of 3,028 West Taylor Street. Recently he received a letter from his aged father in Ireland, who is reputed to be wealthy, in which he urged his son, who is to inherit his property, to come to Ireland and help him get the affairs of the estate in order. "Father sailed on the Lusitania after receiving the letter," said Katherine Callan. "It was his intention to remain in Ireland for several months, when mother was to join him there."

Mrs. James Murray, 6,853 South Green Street, and her baby son, Walter, were on their way back to Castlegate, Lanark, Scotland, to visit her mother and let the neighbors in her natal town see her son. She had not been back for eight years.

Mrs. Charles Young, also of 6,853 South Green Street, was traveling with Mrs. Murray. They occupy a house together and Mrs. Young was also of Scotch birth. Their husbands are employes of the Chicago City railways Company.

A. Gadsden, who gave his address as 18 East Madison Street, was a chauffeur in the employ of F. J. Mackey, a wealthy man who had no definite home, living in Europe and America, lately in California. Gadsden lived in England.

PRESS CALLS SINKING OF LUSITANIA MURDER

Editorials in New York Newspapers Agree Torpedoing Was Crime Against Civilization.

Editorial opinions in New York newspapers this morning regarding the torpedoing of the Lusitania by the Germans were as follows:

The Slaughter of Neutrals and Non-Combatants.

From The Herald.

The civilized world stands appalled at the torpedoing of the Lusitania, with the terrible loss of life—non-combatants, many of them citizens of neutral countries.

If ever wholesale murder was premeditated this slaughter on the high seas was. By official proclamation of an intention to disregard all rules of blockade and all international law, Germany declared that her submarines would sink every ship that sought to enter or leave the ports of the United Kingdom and of France. By official advertisement signed by the Imperial German Embassy at Washington all passengers were warned not to take passage on British ships from the United States for England. By letter and telegram passengers were warned not to go by the Lusitania. The ship had been marked for slaughter. The warnings were disregarded, but she was doomed from the minute she passed out of the three-mile limit.

There may be a thouand dead, there may be fifteen hundred. The extent of the disaster matters little in an international sense. One American life lost makes another case against Germany similar to that of the Gulflight. But undoubtedly hundreds of Americans have been sent swirling to eternity by the German pirates.

Henceforth is international anarchy to be the controlling factor in marine warfare? Henceforth is piracy on the high seas to be recognized and go unprotested and unpunished? Henceforth is the wanton murder of neutrals and non-combatant passengers to be treated as regretable incidents and go at that?

It is for the neutral countries, and above all for the United States, to answer these questions. It is a time of gravity in American history unmatched since the Civil War.

This cold-blooded, premeditated outrage on colossal scale will cause such a blinding white light of indignation throughout the neutral portion of the world, unhappily growing smaller and smaller, that there can not conceivably be in Washington any thought of turning back from the note to Germany, sent Feb. 10.

In the note the United States informed Germany that it viewed the possibilities with great concern and requested Germany to consider the critical situation which might arise were the German naval forces in carrying out the policy foreshadowed to destroy any merchant vessels of the nation or cause the death of American citizens.

"Or cause the death of American citizens!"

Again in this communication the State Department informs the German Government that if German commanders should destroy on the high seas an American vessel or the lives of American citizens, it would be difficult to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights.

"Or the lives of American citizens!"

The Lusitania was a British ship, but this fact does not mitigate the crime of the Kaiser's navy against this republic in killing peaceful American passengers. Nor does the fact that warnings were given mitigate the crime; it rather increases its enormity. Americans had the right to go by any steamship they chose. They had the right to protection by this Government. No government can long last that does not protect its own citizens.

The grave crisis which was precipitated by the torpedoing of the Gulflight grows greater each hour as the tidings from Queenstown swell the list of the dead.

Calls It Unqualified Piracy.

(From The Journal of Commerce.)

The attack on the Lusitania was not war, it was simply attempted murder on a scale deliberately intended to inspire general consternation and fear; it was not the work of the naval force of a power bound by the conventions of law and humanity, it was plain and unqualified piracy.

The fact that it forms the climax of a long series of minor outrages, some of them from the neutral point of view still more lawless, merely increases the difficulty of the problem it presents. For Germany has made it sufficiently plain that she has merely contempt for the opinion of the rest of mankind when it runs counter to the dictates of her policy of savage reprisal. Clearly, nothing but the exercise of superior force can teach Germany to respect conventions heretofore sanctioned by the laws of nations, and with any protest of ours on this or other cases of German naval outrage, must arise the question of how much force we hold in reserve.

One thing may be accepted as certain: the American temper will not indefinitely endure these intentional outrages.

The Sinking of the Lusitania.

From The World.

In each case a passenger ship carrying neutrals and non-combatants was destroyed by a German submarine, and hundreds of helpless men, women, and children left to float or drown, as luck decreed. The destruction of the Lusitania makes a more dramatic appeal to the human imagination than did the destruction of the Falaba, but both were crimes against civilization in equal degree.

It is o fault of the German Government that anybody escaped from either ship. It is no fault of the German Government that every American on board the Lusitania is not lying at the bottom of the sea.

The German authorities claim in extenuation that fair warning was given to Americans by the German Embassy at Washington that the Lusitania was to be torpedoed. The fact that A formally announces his intention to murder B at 3 o'clock tomorow afternoon does not make the subsequent murder of B an innocent or a justifiable act.

What Germany expects to gain by her policy is something we cannot guess. What advantage will it be to her to be left without a friend or a well-wisher in the world? The war cannot last forever. Peace will eventually come, if only through exhaustion. What will be the attitude of the other nations toward Germany when the conflict is finished? How many decades must pass before Germany can live down the criminal record that she is writing for herself in the annals of history?

It has often happened that men in their desperation have become outlaws. But we recall no other instance in which a great nation has deliberately elected to become an outlaw. That is the tragedy of the insensate policy that the German Government is pursuing, and eventually the German people will pay a staggering price for their Government's folly. If the world is again to be ruled by barbarism, let it be a barbarism that does not masquerade as Kultur. Civilization might better perish than to survive on the terms that Germany offers to mankind.

After Effects.

From The Press.

Aside and apart from the question of the legal right of the von Tirpitz Admiralty to destroy the Lusitania or any British vessel that is hauled down but cannot be carried off as a prize, it is well worth considering whether such a shock to the world, as well as provocation to the Allies, will in the end work more to the advantage of the Germans or of their foes.

Grant that with every possible care taken to spare noncombatant life, there was nothing for the submarine to do but to destroy the huge transatlantic liner, since there was no way to get her into a German port, it is not at all sure that the results will justify the daring of the undertaking and the success of its fulfillment.

The British race, like the Germans, is never terrorized by anything. The loss of the Lusitania is the loss of a ship; little ships and big ships the English lose through the generations in war and in peace without dismay or even excitement. They do get from such mishaps a more stubborn purpose and a stouter grip at their work.

Then there is the very probable effect upon Italy. She is more likely to be swept into this war by events which appear for the moment to make against the Allies than by events which appear to make for them. On an easy job in the war, Italy could not, after it was over, ask a great deal of reward. On what at least seemed a hard one, she would be entitled to and would receive a large prize. And it must be evident to any thoughtful consideration that, whether she goes in or whether she stays out of the war, Italy in the long run has scarcely less than France to fear from the triumph of the Teutonic alliance, ready to edge her into the sea.

As Americans.

From The Tribune.

For every American citizen one fact will stand out clear and beyond all else this morning. In defiance, not alone of every principle of international law, but of every dictate of common humanity, American men, women, and children, citizens of this neutral nation, have been exposed to death, have, perhaps, been actually murdered by German war craft.

For this murder there is no justification outside of that law of necessity paraded by the German Chancellor in the opening hours, when the first German regiments rushed through Belgium to consecrate at Louvain the work of German kultur. The passengers, the American citizens, who embarked upon the Lusitania were protected by every rule and precedent of international law. They journeyed to an unblockaded port, and, thus journeying, were entitled to the protection supplied by the rules of civilized warfare.

The vessel on which they sailed was a fair prize for German warships. German sea power was entitled to capture the Lusitania if it could, to sink her if necessity compelled, but not until every non-combatant was taken from her decks, not until the safety of every life had been assured.

From this tragedy we shall now turn to Washington. More than a century ago, when this nation was weak and its people lacking in all the resources of a great power, it made answer to the pirates of the Barbary Coast, who asserted a prerogative less intolerable than that which is now asserted in Berlin and executed upon the high seas.

No voice will be raised, no effort will be made, to force the hand, to hasten the action of the President of the United States. But neither he nor any other official in our Government can mistake the temper in which their fellow-citizens will wait. They will wait with the casualty list in their hands. They will wait, fortified each day and each hour by new evidence and fresh details of the manner in which Americans, American women and children, have been exposed to death by German submarines. The nation which remembered the sailors of the Maine will not forget the civilians of the Lusitania!

Calls It Unqualified Piracy.

From The Journal of Commerce.

The attack on the Lusitania was not war, i twas simply attempted murder on a scale deliberately intended to inspire general consternation and fear; it was not the work of the naval force of a power bound by the conventions of law and humanity, it was plain and unqualified piracy.

The fact hat it forms the climax of a long series of minor outrages, some of them from the neutral point of view still more lawless, merely increases the difficulty of the problem it presents. For Germany has made it sufficiently plain that she has merely contempt for the opinion of the rest of mankind when it runs counter to the dictates of her policy of savage reprisal. Clearly, nothing but the exercise of superior force can teach Germany to respect conventions heretofore sanctioned by the laws of nations, and with any protest of ours on this or other cases of German naval outrage must arise the question of how much force we hold in reserve.

One thing may be accepted as certain—the American temper will not indefinitely endure these intentional outrages.

Premeditated and Dastardly.

From The Sun.

It is proper to keep clearly in mind the fact that the undersea attack on the Lusitania is of less importance to us, as an event involving international relations, than the recent sinking of the Falaba; that is, if it shall happily prove true that all the American passengers who sailed a week ago today on the great Cunarder escaped with their lives. If, on the contrary, any American citizen died in consequence of the torpedoing of the Lusitania the incident is in the class with the Falaba and technically possesses neither more nor less significance than that affair.

Yet when all this has been said the fact remains that no episode of the war has startled and aroused public opinion in this country in greater degree. The moral and intellectual effect is bound to be tremendous beyond measurement. The size, speed, and renown of the vessel, the general interest in her movements and fate, the elaborately advertised warning published a week ago by the German Embassy, coincidentally with the Lusitania's last departure from the port of which she was the pride and favorite, combine to intensify the horror with which American opinion regards this German innovation on accepted methods of warfare at sea. That it was premeditated we know; that it was reckless of innocent non-combatant lives we are sure; and "dastardly" is the word on millions of American lips this morning.

PRESS COMMENTS CONFLICT.

Divergent Views of the Sinking of the Lusitania.

Newspapers in various cities of the United States express conflicting editorial opinions of the torpedoing of the Lusitania. While some consider the attack as a hostile act on the part of Germany against Americans, others take the view that the sinking of the Cunarder is a natural and justifiable consequence of warfare. Following are some of the press comments:

Dangerous Possibilities.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 7.—The Record says editorially:

German submarine warfare has claimed its first big victim from Great Britain's merchant marine.

For Americans the important fact is that there were a large number of American passengers aboard, and that a number have lost their lives as a result of the torpedoing of the ship. And this possibility at once raises the question of the meaning which this country may be called on to give to the President's well-known words about "a strict accountability" for the loss of American lives.

It is true that these Americans were aboard an enemy's ship, but even neutral passengers aboard an enemy's merchant ships have rights under the laws of nations which cannot yield to the supposed exigencies of submarine warfare. And among these rights is that of a reasonable regard for their lives and safety. The situation is full of dangerous possibilities.

Tendency to Involve Us.

Special to The New York Times.

PORTLAND, Oregon, May 7.—The Oregonian will say editorially tomorrow:

By sinking the Lusitania the Germans have shown their determination to destroy the commerce of Great Britain with neutral countries by any means and at all risks. The loss of many lives, even if neutrals, appears to be a matter of no consequence to them; or, if it is of consequence, they take the hazard.

Until all the facts are known it cannot be stated how gravely, in this instance, the rights of neutrals and the dictates of a common humanity have been outraged. But this latest event, which nearly concerns us, is an evidence of the war's tendency to involve us, strive as we may to avoid being drawn into it. In this respect we are in the same position as other neutrals, for the Germans in their war on British commerce have made war on the ships of Holland, Norway, Sweden, and Denmark. One would suppose that Germany had enemies enough to satisfy her, but she seems not to care how many are added in striking at those she already has.

Challenged Great Britain.

Special to The New York Times.

DETROIT, Mich, May 7.—The Free Press will say editorially tomorrow:

The sinking of the Lusitania was the fruition of a scheme by the German Navy Department so carefully thought out and perfected that those privy to it were certain nothing could cause its miscarriage. They did not attempt to surround their enterprise with secrecy; they advertised it in advance, practically challenging Great Britain to prevent them from carrying out their program.

Knowledge of the scheme extended to Ambassador von Bernstorff in Washington, and caused him to insert an extraordinary notice in the Eastern papers warning neutrals from taking passage in vessels of the Allies going through the war zone. The same knowledge was the property of the underlings of the Embassy, and inspired an explanation that the Bernstorff warning was by way of easing the German conscience for anything that might happen.

Nothing has happened in the North Sea zone that has demonstrated more clearly the fact that the British no longer rule in their home waters. They have lost control of the seas where control is most vital to their interests. We may assume that it was chiefly to prove this in a striging way that the Germans destroyed the Cunarder. For as a practical war measure the sinking of the Lusitania was less important than the destruction of a food vessel would have been.

Germany's Policy "Piracy."

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 7.—The Philadelphia Public Ledger will say editorially tomorrow:

That, under the circumstances, all fraught with special honor, the lives were saved, is fortunate for Germany. If scores or hundreds of passengers, American as well as English, had been drowned, the cry for vengeance would have drowned out every voice in favor of negotiation or delay. The mere contemplation of such a contingency is staggering. There has been nothing like it before. One of the consequences of this war ought to be that nothing like it can ever happen again. Unless civilization is to relapse into barbarism, helpless non-combatants must not be exposed in such a fashion to the worst calamities of war.

Only one word characterizes adequately the policy of Germany in this matter. That word is piracy. There is no shadow of excuse for it in military necessity.

Lesson for United States.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal., May 7.—The Chronicle will say editorially tomorrow:

With the torpedoing of the Lusitania Germany scores her largest individual triumph in the war on British commerce. * * * Up till a few days ago British officials were boasting of the fact that the submarine blockade had not proved an effective bar to commerce, and expressed such confidence in the ability of large and swift vessels to elude under-water craft that it was announced the Mauretania would resume her regular transatlantic sailings.

The largest lesson of the Lusitania is one for the United States, and it is the reiterated truth that for defense purposes the dreadnought is junk. * * * Submarines and more submarines must be the keynote of American naval construction. * * *

The question as to whether there were American citizens on board the Lusitania does not call for discussion in this connection. Our people have had ample warning, and should know that when they step aboard a British ship they are consigning themselves to the protection of a nation which at present can offer very little security for those at sea.

"Brute Force" Rules.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, Mo., May 7.—The Republic tomorrow morning will say editorially:

The edifice of international law, that fabric reared by the efforts of statesmen through the centuries of war and peace, lies in ruins.

For the moment there is no law of nations. Brute force rules.

The edifice of international law will be re-erected; new sanctions will be provided; the excesses of the very madness of world strife will be reprobated by the common conscience of the race. The more inexcusable the outrages of the present hour, the surer the reaction and the securer the feet of those who will follow the ways of peace in centuries yet unborn.

"Germany Must Have Gone Mad."

RICHMOND, Va., May 7.—Discussing editorially the sinking of the Lusitania, The Times-Dispatch tomorrow will say:

Germany surely must have gone mad. The torpedoing and sinking of the Lusitania, although it was well known to German authorities that there were many Americans aboard the ill-fated Cunard liner, evince a reckless disregard of the opinions of the world in general and of this country in particular—a determination to win by any methods and at any cost—only compatible with the assumption that blood lust has toppled reason from its throne.

Through centuries of incessant struggle, in the ascent of the race from savagery, civilization has wrung from war certain guarantees of the sanctity of human life. These guarantees are expressed in the code that enlightened nations recognize. They affect neutrals even more intimately than they do belligerents, nor can any belligerent, by its mere ipse dixit, destroy the neutral's privileges and rights.

When a man fires a revolver into a crowd, the law presumes he must have intended the natural consequences of his action. Germany so designed the bolt, and it is that design that fills the American heart with loathing and bitter resentment. It is for that intent that Germany must answer.

Shows the World Chaotic.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 7.—Under the heading "The Two Ships," The Star will say editorially tomorrow:

Between peace and war there is the difference between the loss of the Titanic and the destruction of the Lusitania.

The whole world expressed horror and sympathy at the sinking of the Titanic. The normal universal brotherhood found expression then. The normal good that is in humanity showed itself then.

The destruction of the Lusitania shows the world chaotic; its normal human sentiments twisted by passion and by fatal, or fateful, influences. War is hell. It is organized murder. It is the frowning Providence, made the deliberate choice of man.

Calls the Situation Critical.

BALTIMORE, Md., May 7.—The Baltimore Sun will say tomorrow:

We refrain from expressing any opinion in such a serious hour as this as to the effect which the sinking of the Lusitania will have on our relations with Germany. The situation is too critical for passionate or vehement outcry. Whether any American lives were lost or not, we have arrived at a stage where we must have a clear understanding with Germany as to the future. We cannot allow American lives to be endangered in a species of warfare without precedent among civilized nations, and which is a distinct return to the most brutal practices of barbarism. Our Government will know how to deal with this case, and it will not need any urging from the press to do its full duty. We can safely leave it in the hands of the President, who fears God but does not fear man, and who will preserve the peace as long as it is humanly possible to do so.

One thing should not be forgotten in considering this latest German "triumph." It strikes a far more dangerous blow at Germany than at Great Britain. Americans may be deterred from traveling in British ships, but the sinking of the Lusitania will have absolutely no effect on the fortunes of the war. It will increase British ardor and stimulate British recruiting a hundred fold, and it will show the people of the allied countries that they have nothing to hope from German generosity or mercy in case of German success. The effect on the sentiment of the neutral countries will be to still further intensify anti-German feeling.

People Showing the Strain.

COLUMBIA, S. C., May 7.—Under the heading "Tempting a Peaceful People" The State tomorrow will say:

The President, facing for his country an international problem of constantly and rapidly growing gravity, may rest assured that he will have the resolute support of his people in whatever steps he may think it wise and honorable to take. The people of South Carolina, to the last able-bodied man, would serve their country at his call.

That the temper of the people is showing signs of strain under the repetition of news reports of attacks on American vessels or other ships bearing American passengers is everywhere evident.

Effect on the Public.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, La., May 7.—The Times Picayune tomorrow will say, editorially:

This newest war development brings the American Government face to face with something closely resembling a crisis. If the word had come instead that all were lost we have only to recall what followed the sinking of the Maine in Havana Harbor to gain some idea of the probable effect of such tidings upon the American population. * * * Another attack under like conditions might easily result in a sacrifice of American lives heavy enough to provoke a popular indignation that would sweep the most peacefully disposed Administration off its feet.

Yesterday's efficient rescue should give the President time and opportunity to form his measures without undue pressure from his people. The American majority, we think, will be content to await their Government's action. That the situation will have to be met firmly and with reasonable promptitude seems certain.

LINER'S LOSS FAILS TO HALT SAILINGS

Transylvania, with 879 Passengers, Departs for England After News Is Received.

After news had been received yesterday of the torpedoing of the Lusitania, twelve of those who had booked as passengers on the Transylvania canceled their bookings. Among these were Mackay Edgar of London, E. Larsen of London, J. C. Isbahl of this city, Miss C. M. Roberts of Montreal, William Sutherland of Chicago, R. T. Vanderbilt, an actor of this city; Miss Alda Smith of Montreal, Miss M. Adams of this city, A. Sibigny of Montclair, Miss Rowell Bate and E. Bate of this city.

Captain John Black of the Transylvania, who was for several months on the converted British cruiser Columbia, said before he left he believed his experience in cruising with the Columbia through waters in which submarines were stationed and his knowledge of the methods of fighting off submarines would enable him to take his ship through safely in case of a submarine attack.

"Do you expect to fly the American flag when you reach the war zone?" he was asked.

"No, Sir. I'll take my ship to port with the flag of England flying or none at all," he replied.

All precautions, however, Captain Black said, would be observed when the Transylvania reached the war zone.

Of the Transylvania's 879 passengers, 117 were in the first cabins, 310 in the second, and 452 in the steerage. Almost half the passengers were from Canada, it was said. There was little nervousness apparent among the passengers, all of whom had heard of the Lusitania's fate. The twelve last-minute cancellations, it was said, were not an unusual number. Four of those who canceled passage, officials said, did so because of illness. The reason why the others canceled was not disclosed.

Among the passengers were twenty-three nurses from the Royal Victoria Hospital at Montreal, going over to nurse the wounded Canadian soldiers. Four of them called up their parents in Montreal by long distance telephone and told them of the torpedoing of the Lusitania and asked if they should sail on the Transylvania and were told to put their trust in Providence and do their duty.

Sir Trevor Dawson, Managing Director of the Vickers Company, Limited, who is an ordnance expert and has been here on a mission for the British Government, sailed on the Transylvania for Liverpool with Sir Walter Raleigh. He would not express any opinion on the sinking of the Lusitania, but said that the war would be a long one. The British had plenty of ammunition for the big guns, he said, and were getting small arms ammunition from the factories in England and from this country.

The Transylvania sailed at 6 P. M. instead of 5 P. M. on account of some late cargo.

LIVERPOOL STAGGERED.

Weather Fine When the Lusitania Was Struck.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LIVERPOOL, May 7.—Rumors about the Lusitania were prevalent two hours before confirmation, but were disbelieved. When they were confirmed the public were staggered.

The Cunard Company's first message from Land's End stated that a wireless from the liner had been received asking for help, as the vessel had a heavy list. The underwriters received the same message.

The next Cunard message stated that the liner was sunk by a submarine at 2:33 in the afternoon eight miles south by west of Kinsale Head.

The passengers, 290 saloon, 602 second-class, and 361 third. The crew totaled 665.

Subsequent messages stated that all the available vessels had gone from Queenstown to the scene for rescue work.

The liner sank thirty minutes after being torpedoed.

The Cunard's latest message from Kinsale state that twenty boats of all sorts, belonging to the Lusitania, were in vicinity where the liner was sunk, and fifteen boats were making for the spot to render assistance.

The weather was fine and the wind light.

A Cork message says 300 landed at Clonakilty. It is feared that there is heavy loss of life.

HARLEM GANGSTER KILLED.

Mollica Had Aspired to the Leadership of "Joe" Chuck's Band.

Carmino Mollica, said by the police to have been a gangster in Harlem, was shot and killed last night as he was called to the sidewalk from his coffee house at 335 East 108th Street.

After "Joe" Chuck was sent to the penitentiary for carrying a revolver a year ago, Mollica, who purchased Chuck's interest in the coffee house, had aspired to the leadership of Chuck's gang, the police say. Detectives Mancine and Fogarty of the Third Branch Detective Bureau said last night's shooting was not unexpected.

Patrolman Frank R. Siekman of the East 104th Street Station from Second Avenue saw the flash of the shot from behind a fence on the south side of 108th Street. Siekman also saw Mollica throw up his hands and drop to the ground. When he got to the place Mollica's assailant had disappeared. At the coffee house Mollica's wife said he had received a message to go to Second Avenue to meet some men.

FROHMAN SAILED TO SEE NEW PLAYS

Noted Theatrical Manager Was Eager to See Barrie's New Work, "Rosy Rapture."

WAS TO RETURN IN JULY

Planned Shorter Stay Than Usual to Get an Earlier Start for His American Season.

Charles Frohman, the theatrical manager, sailed on the Lusitania to make his annual visit to London to see the new plays and look after his interests there. Only recently he produced a revue by Sir James Barrie, entitled "Rosy Rapture," and as this was the first work of the kind from the pen of Sir James he was anxious to see it. Upon sailing Mr. Frohman said he would return early in July, cutting his visit short in order to get his productions for the new season under way earlier than usual.

Charles Frohman was born in Sandusky, Ohio, June 17, 1860. His brother, Daniel, who is seven years his senior, came to New York in 1865, and from being a messenger for the editorial staff of The Tribune rose to the position of private Secretary to Horace Greeley. When Charles was a lad of 12, Daniel sent for him and secured for him a job as night clerk in the business office of The Tribune. He prepared in those early years for the long days of ceaseless activity that have since characterized his life, with hours of play-reading, followed by hours of rehearsing with only a few hours for sleep. Young Frohman attended school in the day time, and at night, till 4 o'clock in the morning, worked in the newspaper office. Two years later, when he joined his brother on The New York Daily Graphic, he pursued the same ardous course, working all day and selling tickets at Hooley's Theatre, Brooklyn, at night.

Frohman's Career in Chicago.

That was Mr. Frohman's entry into the theatrical business. In 1877 he went West to take charge of the Chicago Comedy Company, of which John Dillon was the star, and the following year, with William Haverly, he organized the Haverly Mastodon Minstrels, which he subsequently took to England for an engagement in London and a tour of the provinces. In the years immediately following he was associated with his brother Daniel in the management of the Madison Square Theatre, managed the tours of several of the Wallack successes, and established himself as a play broker.

It was in this last-named capacity that Mr. Frohman made his first real bid for fortune. In November, 1888, Bronson Howard's "Shenandoah," was produced in the Boston Museum. In its original form the melodrama was not a success, and Mr. Frohman, who was the author's agent, suggested certain changes to Mr. Howard and secured the American rights. In its revised form "Shenandoah" was presented in the old Star Theatre by Mr. Frohman in association with Al Hayman and W. R. Hooley. Three years later the partners divided $150,000, after paying the author $50,000 in royalties.

Empire Theatre His Pride.

In recent years Mr. Frohman's activities have centred around his Empire Theatre. Here he made his most important productions and here his favorite stars have appeared. The Empire was dedicated Jan. 25, 1893, with "The Girl I Left Behind Me." During its first years Mr. Frohman conducted a stock company of great excellence in the Empire, but more recently, since the wane of the popularity of the stock company as an institution, it has been given over to the plays in which his favorite stars have appeared.

As regularly as Labor Day appears John Drew is presented in a new play in the Empire, so that the appearance of Mr. Drew in the latest things sartorial is considered as essential to the opening of a season as Labor Day itself. Then through the season follow as many of the Frohman galaxy as there is time for—Maude Adams in her Barrie répertoire, Ethel Barrymore, Billie Burke, Blanche Bates, William Gillette, Marie Doro, Otis Skinner and the rest. Just now there are ten of Mr. Frohman's stars appearing there in a revival of "A Celebrated Case." For this production Mr. Frohman and David Belasco, who were associated in the production of plays a quarter of a century ago, joined forces.

Produced Many Famous Plays.

His belief in the star system—there are more under the Frohman banner now than at any one time before—and his loyalty to the older school of English dramatists have been the distinguishing characteristics of Mr. Frohman's career as a producer. Until recent years probably the majority of plays presented by him were by English or other foreign dramatists. All of the plays of Sir James Barrie have been produced by Mr. Frohman, and many from the pens of Henry Arthur Jones, Haddon Chambers, Arthur Wing Pinero, Hubert Henry Davies, and W. Somerset Maugham have first found their way to the stage through the Frohman study. Two of his most famous productions were plays by foreign authors—"Peter Pan," by Sir James Barrie, and "Chantecler," by Edmond Rostand.

Sice 1897 Mr. Frohman has made many productions in London, having held various playhouses in the British capital under lease during the intervening years. The Duke of York's, the Glove, Vaudeville, Prince of Wales, Comedy, and Aldwych Theatres have all been under his control at different times.

Mr. Frohman has maintained offices in London, and for some years he spent half of his time there. Since 1911, when he was taken ill with articulary rheumatism upon his return from abroad, he has spent most of his time in this country. In London he always occupied the same suite in the Savoy, overlooking the Embankment. He and Sir James Barrie have been great cronies since the production of the first Barrie play.

Noted for His Modesty.

Perhaps no New York theatre manager is as little known to his public as Charles Frohman. He has always avoided the spot-light, and it was only a few years ago that the first picture of him was published. This modesty was real, so real, in fact, that it amounted almost to a shyness. On first nights in the Frohman theatres a little man might have been observed sitting in a corner of a box resting his chin on the top of his cane and watching the performance intently.

The little man, suggestive of Napoleon in features because of the contour of his head and the close-knit, undersized body, was Charles Frohman—"C. F." as he is known among his associates, who worship him, "The Chief," as they say in London. And wherever two or three people of the theatre are gathered together, whether they be bill-posters or magnates, they will tell you that "C. F." is one of the squarest men ever identified with the show business.

Mr. Frohman has always been identified with the Syndicate group of managers, being, in fact, one of the organizers of this group, which for a number of years controlled the theatres of the country. In addition to the Empire, he leases the Lyceum from his brother Daniel, and is one of the lessees of the Knickerbocker.

LOST SHIP WAS LONG QUEEN OF THE SEAS

BUILT TO BEAT GERMANS

The sinking of the Lusitania came just seven years, seven months and twenty-three days after she was hailed Queen of the Seas upon her arrival off Sandy Hook on her maiden trip, six hours ahead of the fastest record made up to that time.

It was her great speed that was relied upon to save her from submarine attack, although in February last, on her way from Queenstown to Liverpool, fear of such attack caused her to raise the American flag, an act that roused astonishment on both sides of the ocean and resulted in a statement by the British Foreign Office justifying the use of a neutral flag under such circumstances.

Her first run to sea, when she was completed in the Summer of 1907 by the shipbuilding firm of John C. Brown & Co., at Clydebank, as England's challenge to the supremacy of the German transatlantic liners, carried her over the spot where she was torpedoed.

It was a 900-mile spin around Ireland, and the speed the Lusitania showed made all England joyful, because she promised to do what she had been built to do—to bring back to England the transatlantic record which the Germans had wrested and held for the ten years preceding.

The first four-propellered turbine steamship, which it was the delight of the English to describe as "a floating first-class hotel," the Lusitania was welcomed to New York on her first arrival by more steam whistles than had ever before disturbed the air above the lower bay.

The late J. P. Morgan went out to greet the liner on his yacht, the Corsair, while the crack steamship of the French Line, La Provence, preceded the Lusitania up the bay, by way of showing how great an advance "Big Lucy" was over the best ships of the older days.

Breaks Her Own Speed Record.

The Lusitania gained fame each year and twice managed to break her own records—once in 1908 and again in 1909. She brought to this country the first two-cent mail from England, and she was the first steamship from which a wireless message went out to the world that a dream of shipbuilders had been realized in a ship that could average over a whole day's run more than 25 knots. This great run was made on Wednesday, May 25, 1908, and the twenty-four hours average was 26 1-3 knots.

In the ship's early days a favorite device for illustrating her size was to print pictures showing the Park Row buildings, the Flatiron building, and the St. Paul building piled end on end. The Lusitania, sketched alongside the three, was just short of equalling their combined height. Another favored way of describing her size was to contrast her to the leviatnan which preceded her—the Great Eastern. Her length of 790 feet was a score of sixty-eight feet over the Great Eastern, her beam of eighty-eight feet, an increase of eight feet and her displacement of 45,000 tons, an increase over the Great Eastern of 22,300 tons. Her four screws gave an increase of 13 knots over the Great Eastern's speed of 13.

The Lusitania came sixty-seven years after the Britannia, the first Cunard steamship to cross the ocean, had attested Great Britain's supremacy in trade with the United States. At her launching 10,000 British throats sang "Rule Britannia" until they were hoarse.

From Friday, Sept. 13, 1907, the day of the Lusitania's first great triumph when she took from the North German Lloyd line the sea's speed laurels, men of the salt water on both sides of the Atlantic began to express forebodings about her. There was always present in the literature that grew up around her name, the undertone of foreboding because of the way "Friday the Thirteenth" came to be associated with her career afloat.

A Ship of Colossal Dimensions.

It was said that a third of the Lusitania's possible cabin room was sacrificed to spaciousness. Even with this sacrifice there was room for 500 first-class passengers, 550 second, 1,200 third, and a crew of 910 men, 3,160 souls in all. The cost of the Lusitania was never made public, although it was roughly estimated at $8,250,000 at the time of her launching. When she was fitted and ready for sea she was supposed to represent $10,000,000 invested.

The Lusitania's builders worked definitely, with Admiralty reports before them, based on experiments with the warship Monmouth, to get an increase of one and one-half knots over the speed of the North German Lloyd's champion of the transatlantic race course, the Kaiser Wilhelm II. To obtain this result the Cunard people installed additional furnaces and boilers to provide 52,000 square feet more heating surface than that of the crack liner of the Germans.

The double-bottom system was adhered to in the Lusitania, and doors connecting the various water-tight compartments, of which 170 were provided, were planned to be closed automatically from the bridge in a few seconds.

In the ship's hull 26,000 steel plates, many of which weighed five tons each, were used, while 4,000,000 rivets, weighing 500 tons, held them in place. There were eight decks, and everything about her was of colossal dimensions. Her rudder weight 65 tons, and the three anchors weighed 10 tons each. The main frames and beams, if put end to end, would extend thirty miles. There were 1,200 sidelights and windows, 5,000 incandescent lights, and 200 miles of electric wiring.

Dips Her Pennant to Mauretania.

The various records of the Lusitania became the wonder of the maritime world, but finally her glory as queen of the seas was taken by the Mauretania, her sister ship, which is now in the service of the British Navy. The trip which attracted the eyes of all the world to the Lusitania was made westward in 5 days and 54 minutes. The record that added even more to her fame was 4 days, 11 hours and 42 minutes, but the Mauretania made a trip in 4 days, 10 hours and 41 minutes—a record which still stands.

One of the eventful days in the Lusitania's career was Sept. 16, 1911, when she appeared bedecked in bunting from stem to stern, before thousands of spectators who lined the Battery, completing her third trip across the Atlantic in less than three weeks.

Inasmuch as she was the greatest prize the Germans could hope to win, the trips of the Lusitania since the war began have been watched with much concern. British shipping men insisted that it was safe for her on the ocean because the British fleet was keeping the German fleet in check, and had cleared the ocean lanes of hostile ships. They felt that her speed would carry her through, even if a submarine should try to sink her. Three days after war was declared the Lusitania left New York on one of her regular trips to Liverpool. She slipped out of the harbor in darkness, and it was reported while she was at sea that German warships had captured her and, subsequently, that she was fleeing to some American port.

On Dec. 24 last the Cunard Line paid $50,000 in premiums to insure the Lusitania for a voyage from Liverpool to New York and return, the policy being for $10,000,000. It was the largest sum ever paid for a marine policy.

On her first trips after the war began the Lusitania sailed with her smoke stacks painted plain black, so that she would not be so easily distinguished, but last November she came out again in the Cunard colors, which was taken as a sign of returning confidence, due to the freeing of the seas of German warships.

On Feb. 20 of this year the Lusitania arrived under merchantman's colors, discarding for the first time the blue flag of the Royal Naval Reserve which she was entitled to fly.

SECOND RACE AFTER TURNER.

Lusitania's Captain Dodged Submarines for Hours in January.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 7.—Captain Turner of the Lusitania had a thrilling trip from New York last January, when he took the Transylvania of the Cunard Line on the run that ended in the steamer being hurried into Queenstown to avoid submarines. Captain Turner was put in command of the Transylvania while the Lusitania was used by the Admiralty as a transport. On the Transylvania's on the January trip were 200 first-class passengers, among them 49 Americans. The steamer left New York on Jan. 23, when the Germans were first torpedoing steamers off the British Isles. The steamer was heading for Liverpool on Sunday, Jan. 31, when early in the afternoon a British cruiser hove in sight. Then Transylvania was then sixteen hours from Liverpool. The cruiser wigwagged instructions for the Transylvania to alter her course and head straight for Queenstown. Word was conveyed that submarines had been active off the Rossiare and Wexford coasts, directly in the path to Liverpool.

Captain Turner was advised to speed up the Transylvania to her utmost as the only means of safety. That meant serious work for the Transylvania, which was built for Mediterranean service and was expected to make only 15 knots. As Captain Turner realized that the submarines were looking for his ship, he gave orders to the engine room to put on all steam and to keep all engines going. Within an hour the Transylvania was going at 18 knots, which Captain Turner had thought entirely too much to expect of her. The whole ship throbbed as the engines worked desperately for maximum speed. Along toward dusk came another British cruiser. This time flash signals were used, and the passengers, who knew something was up, gathered on deck to watch the interchange between the two vessels. The cruiser urged Captain Turner to get along as fast as he could, to hug the Irish shore, and to hide all lights. Out went all outside lights and inside only such lights as were needed for passengers to make their way were allowed.

Captain Turner appeared in the dining saloon that Sunday night while the Transylvania was speeding toward the Irish coast and tried to laugh off the fears of the passengers, who had begun to suspect that submarines were after the ship.

As the Transylvania neared the Irish coast searchlights from shore played on the water ahead and behind her, while the waves on the shore side danced in dazzling light. This play of light was meant to spot any submarines that might be near, while the cruiser escorting the ship watched the seaward side, and the huge guns of the Irish defenses poked their noses out ready to fire on any boat that might show the tip of a periscope.

The passengers joined in trying to spot submarines, and the run into Queenstown was most exciting.

Captain Turner beat the submarines that time and got the Transylvania into Queenstown at 2 o'clock the next morning with all safe.

The passengers were kept aboard the ship for five days, after which they went to London by way of Dublin and Holyhead. The Transylvania unloaded at Queenstown.

"I fooled 'em that time," was the boast of Captain Turner when he got the Transylvania into Queenstown.

While the passengers were detained aboard the Transylvania they heard that Captain Turner's run into Queenstown was made none too soon, for the submarines were understood to have been seen outside the harbor soon after the Cunarder got in.

LOOK NOW TO NEUTRALS.

British Expect Strong Action Against German Policy.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, May 8.—The London Daily News, in an editorial on the sinking of the Lusitania, says that nothing the Germans have done will send such fierce horror and indignation through the world as the sinking of the Lusitania. It continues:

"It raises for neutrals in its sharpest form a question of first importance, they, and in particular the United States, are bound to defend the lives of their own subjects, though they are not bound to defend the subjects of other States. Can they, after this, content themselves with the pretext that it is a question in deciding which they do not need the assistance or exhortation of a belligerent. It is too insistent, too formal for that.

"Our concern is different. It is first to register this latest and greatest outrage, and when it is in our power to do justice we must not content ourselves with punishing subordinates; there must be no head too high to fall for this. But that lies in the future. For the present we must take what measures we can to avert a repetition of the crime and disaster, and in every case we must defeat the purpose which inspired them.

"It is doubtless the hope of the enemy to convert the importance of their blockade into a reality by terror. They have mistaken the temper of the people of these islands, and all men, whatever their nationality, for whom civilization has a meaning. The traffic of the seas will continue as though no Germans lurked beneath the waters to commit murder, and the task of bringing the murderers to justice and ridding the world of this horror of brutality will be carried on with sterner and fiercer energy."

"It was known that the enemy intended making a dead set at transatlantic vessels," said Commander Carlton Bellairs, M. P., in an interview yesterday published in The Chronicle, "but I am certain that while the event may impress the imagination by reason of its size and the magnificence of the vessel, it will not impair the courage of any one here in the slightest particular."

It came as a surprise to him, Commander Bellairs added, that the Lusitania had been torpedoed by a submarine. Apart from the general assumption that the patrol system would provide for a safeguard of transatlantic shipping it was hard to believe that an enemy submarine could strike a vessel with speed to avoid her. The Lusitania had a speed of twenty-five knots, and it was generally assumed that any vessel over fifteen knots was practically immune.

"Of course it is possible," said Commander Bellairs, "that a submarine was lying in the Lusitania's course; but that was a set of circumstances that could not occur very often. We have lost two warships since the outbreak of the war in that way, but they were not at high speed, while the Lusitania presumably was traveling at high speed.

"Some time back there were a number of similar happenings off Beachy Head, but the Admiralty apparently took certain definite steps, and the sinking of vessels off that part of the coast ceased, and doubtless the same thing would occur on the west coast.

"I have long felt that a danger lies in the organization of German-Americans. Having regard to what has happened and what may happen, I feel that we ought to pass a law empowering our Consuls to refuse passports, except with sound reason, to all neutrals to travel by English ships."

Wanted in 'Frisco; Caught Here.

Detectives locked up in the Third Branch Detective Bureau in East 116th Street last night George Garfield, an architect, who, they said, was convicted of forgery in San Francisco, sentenced to four years in prison, paroled in June, 1914, and who violated his parole. Garfield married Ada M. Fletcher in San Francisco and they came here five months ago and went to live at 223 West 145th Street. Several days ago Mrs. Garfield was arrested in Wilkes-Barre in connection with the passing of a forged check. What she told the police then led to the arrest last night.

AGAIN BART DUNN IS LOST TO VIEW

SAID TO BE COMING HERE

Where is Bart Dunn?

New York Stat authorities have been trying since December, 1913, to make the former Tammany politician serve a sentence for road grafting. While extradition papers from Governor Whitman were waiting to be acted upon next Tuesday, by Governor Fielder, Dunn left Gales Sanitarium in Butler, N. J., yesterday afternoon for a destination unknown, according to a dispatch to THE TIMES last night.

A limousine drove up to the sanitarium where Dunn was supposed to be under legal detention about 2 o'clock in the afternoon and a handsomely gowned woman entered the place. Two hours later she came out with a man, much bundled up, who was said to have been Dunn. The two entered the automobile, which left in the direction of New York City.

Inquiry at the sanitarium over the telephone last night brought the information that no one there really knew where Dunn was.

In addition to being supposedly under the watch of an officer at the sanitarium, Dunn was under $5,000 bond, furnished by Mrs. O. E. Lakeland of Summit, N. J., to whose home Dunn went last December after the Court of Appeals had upheld his conviction for grafting in the highway construction in Rockland County. He is said to be engaged to marry Mrs. Lakeland.

"This is news to me," exclaimed Mrs. Lakeland when told over the telephone last night that her fiancé was gone.

"It can't be true," said she. "He's a sick man; he can't get out of bed. Besides I am on his bond. I put him the sanitarium, and when he leaves I am the only woman who is going to take him away. I was talking to the doctor who has him in charge this morning and I was told that Mr. Dunn was in a serious condition. It can't be that he has left the sanitarium."

Louis Marshall is Dunn's attorney. Asked last night to throw light on Dunn's disappearance, he said he knew nothing of it.

Dunn was tried on charges preferred after the investigation of highway construction by Governor Sulzer. He was tried in December, 1913, convicted and sentenced to ten months in the penitentiary and $5,000 fine. It was after the conviction was upheld last December that he disappeared, forfeiting bail. In the early part of April he was found at the Butler Sanitarium, and put under detention on April 27. He had been stricken with pneumonia on a visit to the home of Mrs. Lakeland in December and she had put him in the sanitarium.

District Attorney Gagan of Rockland County asked Governor Whitman two weeks ago to sign extradition papers to bring Dunn within the jurisdiction of this State. Mr. Marshall said in Dunn's behalf that his client was a sick man, produced physicians' affidavits that Dunn was suffering from "depressed melancholia evidenced by muscular contractions and facial anxiety," and asked that the Governor wait six months to give Dunn time to get well. Mr. Gagan pointed out that under the New Jersey law a fugitive from justice could be held only thirty days. Governor Whitman signed the extradition papers several days ago.

Mrs. Lakeland, whom Dunn's New Jersey attorney, Randolph Perkins, says his client is to marry, is wealthy. She is the widow of William Lakeland, a horseman, who raised and raced thoroughbreds. She has devoted much time to raising dogs.

TWO FREIGHTERS SUNK OFF THE IRISH COAST

The Candidate and Centurion, British Craft, Blown Up by Submarines.

LONDON, May 7.—The British steamer Candidate was torpedoed by a German submarine yesterday off Waterford, Ireland. The members of her crew were saved. The Candidate was outward bound when she encountered the submarine eighteen miles from Waterford. Members of the crew said the vessel was torpedoed without warning.

Four boats were launched from the Candidate. One of these was swamped, but the occupants clambered into the other boats. All of the crew, numbering forty-four, landed at Milford Haven.

The British steamer Centurion also was torpedoed by a German submarine off the Irish coast yesterday. Her crew was saved. The Centurion was attacked about the same time that the Candidate, owned by the same company, was sunk. The Centurion was bound for South Africa and the Candidate for Jamaica.

The British steamer Candidate was of 3,826 tons net register. Built in Glasgow in 1906, she was 398 feet long. The Centurion was 339 feet long, and her net tonnage was 3,854. Both were owned in Liverpool.

SEVEN KILLED BY TORNADO.

South Carolina Homes Wrecked and Much Damage Done to Crops.

COLUMBIA, S. C., May 7.—Seven persons were killed, many seriously hurt, and much property destroyed late today by a tornado that swept over the Pee Dee section of South Carolina. Greatest damage was reported in Clarendon, Orangebury, Darlington, and Marlboro Counties. Houses were wrecked, trees uprooted, and crops injured in many localities.

At Manning, Clarendon County, parts of the business section were practically wiped out. Miss Clara Baggett, Beasley Davis, and a negro porter were killed there. Inez Tartand and her young brother perished on a plantation in Marlboro County. The almshouse of Marlboro County was wrecked, two deaths and several serious injuries resulting.

HUNTINGDON, Tenn., May 7.—Mrs. Lee Bunn and her child were killed and Mrs. E. Hilliated was probably fatally hurt last night when their homes, near Huntingdon, were wrecked by a windstorm.

Y. M. C. A. AIDS SOLDIERS.

Rest Rooms and Social Centres Given to Kitchener's Army.

The work done among the volunteers of Kitchener's army in training on British soil by the Y. M. C. A. army camps is described in the April issue of The American Oxonian by W. F. Crossland, one of the American Rhodes scholars who found that service for the Y. M. C. A. was the only way in which they could serve the British cause without giving up their American allegiance.

The association's Board of Control got permission as soon as the volunteer army was started to place rest rooms, either tents or huts, to serve as social centres in the larger camps and to keep the men from indulging too freely in the life of the public houses. After inspection by a board of members of Parliament, including several Cabinet officers, it was decided to make the work permanent and to form a special arm of the service to accompany the army wherever it goes.

"Temporary marquees," writes Mr. Crossland, "have been placed in practically every camp in England, and are being superseded as rapidly as they allow by permanent frame buildings with kitchens and sleeping quarters for the staff. This is the social centre of the camp, and, to prevent it becoming a select club, non-members as well as members are welcome to all its comforts. Reading and writing rooms with games are provided for the Tommies, while off duty, and a piano, which always proves attractive to the soldier-musicians. A miniature post office does a thriving business; but perhaps the most popular and busy part of the whole establishment is the commissary—a counter where soft drinks, candy, cakes, tobacco, and hot coffee are served at a minimum charge of 2 cents, which does not often cover the outlay of the association. The services of all helpers except those of the camp leader and the cook are voluntary, and many workers now take their annual vacation in this way. Concerts and entertainments are organized, at which the officers are frequent attendants."

The workers at these camps, whether British or American, hold the temporary rank of Second Lieutenant during their terms of service.

LARGE SUBMARINE SEEN.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, May 8.—The Daily Chronicle says:

"One of the U-boats, that is believed to have been lurking off the Irish coast, has been described by the Skipper of Collier Fulgent that was sunk by her. She is of the latest type, painted grey, over 400 feet long, carried six torpedo tubes showed no number and carried a powerful gun on deck. These details correspond to those of the submarine of the U-36 type. Such a vessel is as long as a modern destroyer and must displace about 1,000 tons. On effect she is sort of a submarine cruiser. The Falaba was sunk in Bristol Channel by one of these U boats.

"These vessels can keep the sea for many weeks without having to take on supplies of any kind. Their effective radius is about 4,000 miles, in other words, a modern German submarine could go from Liverpool to Newfoundland and back, or the equivalent distance from a German naval base, such as Zeebrugge. Their surface speed is supposed to be from 18 to 20 knots; when submerged considerable less, probably about 10 to 12 knots.

"As the Lusitania off Kinsale Head would be doing about twenty-five knots it might seem difficult for the enemy moving at only two-fifths of the speed to hit her. On the other hand, it should be remembered, that the German skipper had the advantage of knowing to a half an hour when and where his prey would be at a given moment; that he could be in wait, and that he could move athwart the liner's path so as to meet her.

"According to the German naval press, the latest U boats are fitted with double-acting oil engines of 1,000 horse power or more. These engines are as simple and run as smoothly as a marine engine and are as easily controlled.

"So strongly built are these craft that they can plunge to a depth of 150 feet, at which the water pressure is enormous. A security weight, as it is called, is carried of about five tons. This can be released from inside of the vessel at a moment's notice, and the effect is like that of dropping a mass of ballast from an airship. When in diving trim, that is to say when she is awash, an up-to-date U boat can disappear under water in fifteen seconds and re-emerge in twenty seconds. She can remain under water for a whole day and night or even longer."

STUDENTS LAUD WILSON.

Columbia Undergraduates Send a Memorial of Appreciation.

More than one hundred Columbia University students yesterday sent to President Wilson a memorial expressing their approval of his stand as to neutrality. Among the students who signed the memorial were Karl G. Karsten, President of the Anti-Militarist League; Walter H. Dwyer, Chairman of the Students' Board; Freda Kirchwey, Student President of Barnard College; Franklin G. Dunham, editor of The Spectator; H. C. Mellamed, editor of The Morning; Paul H. Douglas, President of the Socialist Club, and John Cover, President of the Common Sense League.

In their memorial the students said:

"We both for ourselves and for the great body of American students desire respectfully to acquaint the President of our highest regard for his strong adherence to the upright policy of neutrality, our fullest confidence in his wisdom and ability to maintain this wise course, and our devout gratitude that through the storm of European disaster the United States has so brave and true a leader."

AUSTRALIA WARMS UP TO JAPAN AS ALLY

GRATEFUL FOR NIPPON'S AID

Commission from Tokio, Seeking to Gain Trade Germany Had, Is Well Received.

Special Correspondence of THE NEW YORK TIMES.

SYDNEY, Australia, March 20.—Japan, not unnaturally, is seizing the opportunity presented by the Anglo-German conflict of trying to capture part of the big trade which Germany carried on with Australia, and is endeavoring at the same propitious time to bring about a feeling of greater friendliness between herself and the British Commonwealth in the South Pacific.

War and alliances, like politics, bring about odd situations—a fact which, without any disparagement of the Japanese, is illustrated by the state of affairs that now prevails in this quarter of the globe. Six months or a year ago no country was perhaps so unpopular with Australia as Japan. This dislike was not at all the fault of the Japanese, but was the outcome of a campaign of suspicion and apprehension, which reached a climax in Gen. Sir Ian Hamilton's speech of warning against Asiatics, delivered in New Zealand only a few months before the war began.

Australian newspapers, not only those of the laborite stamp, but others of more conservative temper, were active with editorials and cartoons against the Japanese. This was on the principle that inspires anti-Japanese agitators in California, but with the difference that Australia's Japanese population is virtually negligible, whereas California's is not. It is an open secret that the system of compulsory military training, set in motion about two years ago by the Commonwealth and now in full swing, had in view a hypothetical invasion by armed hosts of the Mikado. Moreover, the Australian Navy is popularly thought to have had its origin in the same distrust and fear.

But what a metamorphosis since August! Recently Andrew Fisher, the Prime Minister, and leader of the Labor Party, (albeit he is a moderate,) said in Melbourne, in answer to a question put to him in Parliament, that far from any effort being made to leave the Japanese flag out of decorations at public gatherings, the Australian Government knew no distinctions when it came to allies. This was true, and the red ball ensign of Nippon is more generally displayed nowadays in Australian cities, and with more amiability, so far as can be judged from surface conditions, than has been the case for a half dozen or more years.

Australia viewed with equanimity the occupation of the German Marshalls, Carolines, Ladrones, and Pelews by Japanese bluejackets several months ago, whereas under any other circumstances than the present there would have been a loud and angry outcry from the Commonwealth. In this matter, as in others, Japan showed tact and deference to Australian susceptibilities by withdrawing as soon as possible from those groups, and thus making the way clear for their military occupation by Commonwealth troops until the end of the war. This act of surrender was perhaps harder for the Japanese because it is the theory on some ethnological lines the Japanese race sprang from the more northerly of these archipelagoes, upon which still stand mighty forts and canals of an extinct people, and the Japanese are said to covet the islands on that account.

A Japanese trade commission has just come to Australia, headed by Dr. J. Miura, Secretary of the Imperial Department of Commerce, and including Mr. Apcar, who acts as interpreter when required, and Messrs. Matumora, Nakagawa, and Hishida, Tokio business men. It is here, largely owing to the representations of the Japanese Consul General, S. Shimizu, to the home Government, that the time was ripe for cementing commercial relations between Australia and Japan.

To the commission was given a reception a few days ago by the Sydney Chamber of Commerce. The tenor of the Japanese delegates' speeches related not to the obligations under which Great Britain was to Japan for the latter's victorious operations at Tsing-Tsao, or her naval co-operation in the Pacific, on the terms of the Anglo-Japanese alliance, or the altered state of Australian public opinion, but to business pure and simple.

Consul General Shimizu said in an introductory way that in Japan could be manufactured and produced almost anything wanted in Australia, and as far as the Commonwealth was concerned the exports of wool from it to Japan, which had lately been very small, could be increased as much as thirty-fold. He also expressed a special desire on behalf of Japan for lead and zinc from the famous Broken Hill mines. He concluded by saying that he had in mind the mutual benefit of Japan and Australia and, incidentally, the benefit of the Allies.

Dr. Miura pointed out that rapid strides had been made of late in the development of commerce between Australia and Japan, and he had great hopes that Australian and Japanese business men would join hands and seize the very favorable chance now presented of enlarging these relations.

"On my part," said he "it is needless to say that I will do all I can to help the promotion of the trade, and I will work with the courage and patience of a soldier on the battlefield."

DISASTER IS CRITICAL FOR U. S., BECK SAYS

Tells Trust Companies We Must Await Full Facts About Lusitania.

QUOTES AMERICAN NOTE

R. C. Smith of Montreal Only Other Speaker at Dinner of American Bankers' Association Section.

James M. Beck, formerly Assistant Attorney General of the United States, who was the principal speaker last night at the annual diner of the Trust Companies of the United States, members of the Trust company section of the American Bankers' Association at the Waldorf, began his speech on "The United States" with reference to the Lusitania disaster.

"I address you at a time when it is embarrassing for anybody to say anything," he said. "If there ever was a time to which the saying, 'Silence is golden,' applied, it is the present. Our Government faces a situation which is perhaps more critical than any that has arisen during the war. We are all filled with horror at the disaster which we have learned of today, and perhaps many of us, with a measure of apprehension.

"The state of mind we should seek to be in can be illustrated by an incident of the life of our great President, McKinley. Shortly after the unfortunate happening in the harbor of Havana, when public agitation was running high, members of a commercial board of Cincinnati, I think it was, decided it was incumbent upon them to express to the President their feeling that the Government ought to take immediate action.

"When they had come into his inner room and he was about to receive them, President McKinley interrupted for a moment and said he had just been informed that Captain Sigsbee of the Maine had arrived and would like to speak to him before he addressed them. Captain Sigsbee entered the room and McKinley greeted him cordially, and then, in a tone which was so marked that no one in the room could escape the significance he meant to convey, the President said to him, 'Captain Sigsbee, you never did a better thing in your life than when you asked the American people to suspend judgment on this matter until the facts could be learned.'

Quotes "Rocking the Boat."

"That is the spirit we ought to show in this catastrophe, which has come nearer to us than anything which has yet happened in this war. At this time it is well for us to remember the words of President Wilson about 'rocking the boat.' In this period of excitement everyone should take care to do nothing that might rock the boat. But if we refrain carefully from rocking the boat, we have a right to expect that the captain on the bridge shall not sleep at his job. The captain and the crew must be alert to manage safely the course of the ship through the turbulent waters on which it has suddenly entered.

"No further remark on this subject is needed than that which our patriotic President made a few months ago, through the medium of the Secretary of State, addressed to a power which I need scarcely specify here. Let me read a portion of it to you."

Here Mr. Beck read an excerpt from the American note addressed to Germany by Secretary of State Bryan regarding the safety of American ships in the war zone. As he concluded the excerpt impressively with the words, 'to safeguard American lives and property and to secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of their acknowledged rights on the high seas," there was a storm of appaluse.

"Let us be patient, therefore," the speaker continued, "until we are in possession of the full facts. We have not them yet. And in the meantime let us have confidence in the spirit expressed in the broad, brave, heroic resolution of our State Department.

"In the barnyard of the international States, if I may put it so, there is no more thoroughly domesticated bird than the American eagle. But it will be well to remember not to try to pull too many feathers out of his tail."

Washington and Genet.

The principal part of Mr. Beck's speech was devoted to a comparison of the international situation which faced the United States at the beginning of its history with the elements in the same situation as they exist today with reference to the European war. He said th's country was almost in the same position internationally today that it was during the great continental war that was occurring when it was first established, except that then it was an infant among nations and now it was the most powerful of the neutral countries.

"The distinguishing feature of the American republic through all its history has been the sobriety, the restraint, the patient tendency with which it has viewed every foreign crisis," he said. "'Tis we owe to Washington more than to any statesman, living or dead."

"When France, relying on the openly expressed sympathy of almost our entire people, which they had a right to feel because of the invaluable assistance France had given us during the Revolution and because we stood bound by treaty obligation in case of war to protect her possessions in the Western hemisphere—when France sent Genet over here to fit our privateers and organize expeditions, Washington protested. And when that rather tactless youth of twenty-eight had the hardihood to attempt to appeal over the President's head to what he thought would be the majority opinion, Washington expressed thoroughly his strong sense of outrage to the French Government and demanded that Genet be recalled, and he was recalled.

"The example of Genet should be a warning to any diplomat who attempts to appeal over the head of the President of the United States to the citizens."

Public Opinion to End War.

Mr. Beck read many letters of Washington on his foreign policy, in which he apparently laid down the principle of absolute political isolation. But the speaker argued that this principle should not apply nowadays and Washington would not have intended it at the present time, since we had outgrown the "infant republic" stage. Now Washington would have wished us to exert our moral strength to the utmost in aid of civilization.

The Primrose Ring

By Ruth Sawyer

"If you have a 'foolish sentimental' fondness for children, not only your own, but all the little folk who come stumbling into this awfully complex world of ours, step into the primrose ring, reach across it to this little heroine, and let her give you back again the heart of a child which you have lost somewhere along the Road of Growing-Old-and-Wise."

The Life-Builders

By Elizabeth Dejeans

Who is the more conservative—man or woman—when it is a question of home and marriage? This is the question which the author asks, the theme of her clean and earnest romance of a vital, gracious and graceful woman, who dreamed of marriage based on genuine love upon which husband and wife should build toward an ideal future. The author's handling of the question is unusual, but full of insight into the differences in masculine and feminine nature.

Bred of the Desert

By Marcus Horton

"Here at last is a story about a horse worthy to be classed with some of the notable interpretations of dog character and life in fiction. The sympathy and the verisimilitude with which it is written ought to bring it warm and quick welcome from all lovers of the horse, while the interesting story it tells with skill and color, humor and emotional suspense, may be trusted to find for it many admirers among those who like a well-told, absorbing tale."—N. If you are one of the many who are especially fond of mystery or detective stories, take advice and get a copy of "Pals First." This is a most baffling mystery story in which you either make up your mind quickly how the mystery is solved, or are convinced that the next page will disclose it. Nevertheless, you will have to read as far as page 321 before the author solves it for you, and then you will find it is not at all as you had imagined it would be. In addition to this, there is a very sweet love story.

ITALY'S DECISION SAID TO BE WAR

Believed in London the Kaiser Will Declare Hostilities and Try Crushing Blow.

VIENNA GIVES FINAL TERMS

Austrians and Germans in Italy Fear the Worst and German School Is Closed.

ROME PARLIAMENT PUT OFF

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Saturday, May 8.—From an entirely trustworthy source it is asserted that Italy's definite decision to enter the war has now been taken.

It is added that the German Government is acquainted with the determination of the Rome Cabinet and it is considered more than likely that the Kaiser, following the line indicated in his minatory telegram to Ambassador Prince von Bülow, will declare war upon his former ally and simultaneously endeavor to strike a crushing blow at her.

ROME, May 7.—The date for the convening of the Senate and the Chamber of Deputies has been postponed by royal decree until May 20. The original date set for the opening of Parliament was May 12.

The situation is rapidly becoming more tense. The press considers that only a miracle now can keep Italy out of the war.

Deputy Cirmeni today expressed the opinion that the action of the Government indicated that a rupture of negotiations with Austria was not only certain, but imminent, and the belief is expressed in diplomatic circles that the Italian Government, in view of the postponement of the date for convening Parliament, desires to confront Parliament with an accomplished fact.

King Victor Emmanuel as early as 8 o'clock this morning was in consultation with the Minister of War, General Zupelli, and an hour later Premier Salandra and Foreign Minister Sonnino went into consultation. Shortly afterward the secretary of the German Ambassador, Prince von Bülow, arrived with a letter, the nature of which has not been disclosed. Finally a Cabinet council was held at the Ministry of the Interior and continued for several hours.

The Austrian Embassy has issued a denial that Baron Goluchowski has been intrusted by the Vienna Government with a special mission to Rome.

The railroad administration announces that forty passenger trains on the principal lines have been abandoned because of difficulty in obtaining coal.

The Italian Chamber adjourned on March 22 with a vote of confidence in the Government of 320 against 2—the strongest vote given to any Government in the history of United Italy. The last vote of confidence in regard to credits for national defense had been on Dec. 5, 1914, when it was 413 to 40.

The adjournment of March 22 had been preceded by a series of speeches both against and for intervention on the side of the Entente powers, the latter, according to the press, having provoked the most fervent applause, with cries of "Viva il Trentino," "Viva Trieste," "Viva il re," &c. At the last moment a jarring note was introduced by Signor Turati, who, in debating on the proposal of Premier Salandra to have the Chamber adjourn till May 12, suggested April 15. Signor Salandra then said:

"If the Government proposes a longer recess than usual it is because it is conscious of its duty to concentrate all attention on present problems, whether of internal policy, international policy, or foreign policy. The Government has had repeated evidences of the confidence of the Chamber, which has clearly expressed its readiness to leave the Government the most ample liberty of action. I feel sure I can declare that Parliament unanimously desires safeguarding the legitimate interests and just aspirations of the country."

The Chamber then adjourned until May 12. Italians in New York conversant with the debate of March 22 have declared that on that day the Government practically received from the Chamber a mandate to employ all measures to safeguard "the legitimate interests and just aspirations of the country" and that "ample liberty of action" could only mean intervention on the side of the Entente powers before the Chamber met again.

AUSTRIA'S FINAL TERMS.

Said to Have Been Delivered to Italian Cabinet Wednesday.

PARIS, May 7.—A Havas dispatch from Rome says the Austrian Ambassador is reported to have handed to Foreign Minister Sonnino at a conference yesterday afternoon the Vienna Cabinet's final proposals to Italy containing the extreme concessions the dual monarchy is willing to make.

While the utmost secrecy is observed regarding these concessions Austrians and Germans in Rome have lost confidence in a favorable outcome of the negotiations. Prince von Buelow, the German Ambassador, also called upon Baron Sonnino yesterday afternoon.

The Temps today publishes a dispatch from its correspondent at Rome who says the impression prevails there that Italy is on the eve of a supreme decision. The negotiations with Austria clearly have reached a critical stage. In German circles there is great depression, and every one now is convinced that Italy will not recede and that Austria cannot satisfy her demands.

Rome, the correspondent continues, is waiting in feverish anxiety, as it is known that Germany is making her last effort with Austria. No one hopes for any result from this desperate attempt, and the "breaking of the thread still holding Italy to the central empires is expected at any minute."

Austria is continuing to make extensive preparations for defence against an attack by Italy, according to a dispatch to the Petit Parisien from Turin. Railway service was suspended for six hours last Friday and Saturday at Graz and Laybach to permit the passage of military trains carrying artillery and ammunition to Triest.

Considerable German forces are said to be at Graz awaiting transportation to Zagrab, Croatia, and thence to Bosnia and Dalmatia.

TURKS LED TRIPOLI REVOLT.

Italy to Ask the Porte for Immediate Explanations, Paris Hears.

PARIS, May 7.—Reports are current here that an official report to the Ministry of War regarding the attack on Colonel Miami's Italian force in Tripoli contains proofs that Turkish officers commanded the rebels, says a Petit Parisien dispotach from Turin, and that the Italian Government will ask the Porte for an immediate explanation.

Colonel Maimi's command was attacked by a rebel band south of Syrta on April 30 and forced to retreat owing to the desertion of irregulars to the rebels. The Italian losses were eighteen officers and 200 men killed or wounded.

GERMANS LEAVING ITALY.

School in Rome Closes Suddenly and Teachers Depart for Germany.

ROME, May 7.—Upon receipt of a dispatch from Berlin the German school in this city suddenly was closed yesterday afternoon.

PARIS, May 7.—The Vatican has advised all German and Austrian ecclesiastics and theological students to leave Rome immediately, according to a dispatch to the Petit Parisien from the Italian capital.

GENEVA, Switzerland, May 7.—The cantonal authorities in the Cantons of Berne, Zurich, Geneva, and Lucerne have issued orders that in the future no official German telegrams be posted in public in hotels in these Cantons.

The Swiss Federal authorities have taken no action against this giving out of German news. The measures are confined entirely to the local administrations.

KING SENDS FOR VENEZELOS

PARIS, May 7.—A special dispatch from Rome says that former Premier Venizelos of reece, who is now at Cairo, has been recalled suddenly to Athens in view of events which are impending.

M. Venizelos and his Cabinet resigned when King Constantine declined to accept his recommendation that reece enter the war on the side of the Allies. He exiled himself voluntarily from his country when a question of veracity arose between the King and himself, declaring he would not return until he had been vindicated.

WHY DUNKIRK IS SAFE.

French Dropped 2,000 Shells on the German Big-Gun Battery.

PARIS, May 7.—A news dispatch received here from Dunkirk says the battery of 15-inch German guns which bombarded Dunkirk several days ago was located by an aviator who flew over the spot at a height of 450 feet.

The airman took photographs showing the exact position of the guns, after which 2,000 shells were fired on the casemates sheltering the guns, which are supposed to have been destroyed.

LONDON, May 6.—The American sailing ship Carolyn, from Savannah March 30 for Rotterdam, is now discharging her cargo of cotton at Leith, Scotland. At the head of the group will be Edward Stuart, a member of the School for Health Officers.

SAY BRITISH LOST HILL 60 TRENCHES

Germans Report That They Hold to Position Against All Attacks.

DAY OF ARTILLERY DUELS

LONDON, May 7.—That the Germans have recaptured Hill 60, to the southeast of Ypres, is to be inferred from these words in the Berlin official report:

"All attempts of the English at Ypres to wrest away from us Hill 60 * * * failed"—this despite the fact that French and British reports for days have mentioned the hill as the scene of fighting, with the British in possession of the major part of the trenches. Other gains "in the direction of Ypres" are also reported from Berlin, and the Germans are said to be holding the territory in the Woevre which they gained in recent attacks.

Berlin admits, however, that the French still hold part of the trenches which they captured at Flirey.

Beyond recording violent artillery combats north of Ypres and on the heights of the Meuse, and the repulse of minor German attacks last night near Peronne and Fort Beausejour, the French official reports have little to say.

The claims of the Germans, as set forth in their Berlin Headquarters report, are as follows:

All attempts of the English at Ypres to wrest away from us Hill 60, which since April 17 has formed the focus of fighting, failed. We gained further territory there in the direction of Ypres. During the battles there yesterday the enemy lost seven machine guns, one mine thrower, and a large number of rifles with ammunition.

Between the Meuse and the Moselle we maintained the fortified territory gained in the Meuse hills and southwest of the forest of Ailly.

At Flirey a small portion of a trench forming part of our position still is in possession of the French. Otherwise all their attacks were repulsed.

The attempt of the enemy to make an attack north of Steinbrück, in the valley of the Fecht, were checked at the outset by our fire.

The comparative quiet of the operations of last night and today, largely due to the bad weather, is thus described in the Paris official communiques:

(Night Report.)—Last night the enemy delivered two minor attacks—one at Frise, west of Peronne, the other in Champagne, around the Fort of Beausejour. He was repulsed both by gunfire and the bayonet.

The very bad weather this morning stopped all action. During the afternoon there was an artillery engagement of particular violence on the heights of the Meuse.

(Afternoon Report.)—The Germans delivered an attack yesterday at the close of the day at Bagatelle, in the Argonne. It resulted in a complete failure.

On the remainder of the front, particularly to the north of Ypres and in the region of Varquois, there have been violent artillery engagements.

VOTE CREDITS UNANIMOUSLY

French Deputies Cheer Minister Ribot's Patriotic Speech.

PARIS, May 7.—Alexandre Ribot, Minister of Finance, addressing the Chamber of Deputies today on the financial situation concluded his speech with these words:

"In compete unity with all parties and with all quarrels put aside, we swear to pursue by every means and until victory the end we have in view."

The entire Chamber was on its feet in an instant and acclaimed the orator frantically. The credits asked for by the Minister of Finance were voted unanimously.

In explaining the financial situation of the country, M. Ribot said that the deficit at the end of April was 1,500,000,00 francs ($300,000,000), while the public up to the end of April had taken 1,200,000,000 francs ($240,000,000) in national defense bonds.

The expenditures were increasing. the Minister said, as it was impossible for the Government to stint its outlay during the war. He still had 400,000,000 francs ($80,000,000) to be advanced by the Bank of France under a previous agreement, and under a new agreement just signed, the advances to be made by the bank would be increased from 5,500,000,000 francs ($1,100,000,000) to 9,000,000,000 francs ($1,800,000,000).

Continuing, M. Ribot said that David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the British Exchequer, had agreed to place 1,500,000,000 francs ($300,000,000) of French bonds in England to cover French purchases there, in the United States and in Canada, with the understanding that France should furnish sufficient gold to permit England to maintain exchange with the United States.

Speaking of the situation between France and the United States, the Minister of Finance said this was not so unfavorable as might be supposed, for the reason that exports had not suffered as much as had been expected. The Minister said Europe was taking from the United States from 700,000,000 to 800,000,000 francs ($140,000,000 to $160,000,000) in purchases per month.

MISERY IN WEST POLAND.

Great Suffering in Mine District Held by Germans.

WARSAW, May 7, via London.—A detailed report of the desperate situation prevailing today in the mining districts of Western Poland, now in possession of the Germans, has been received by the Rockefeller Commission which was organized to assist the suffering population of this region.

A comparison of food prices before the war with those which prevailed in January of this year show the following contrasts: Rye flour increased from $40 to $90 per ton, wheat flour from $60 to $102, buckwheat from $60 to $125, and peas from $60 to $250. Before the war a ton of straw cost $210; in January it brought $612, and the price of oats has increased 600 per cent.

Out of a population of 135,000 in the district of Sosnovits, 12,650 persons are now dependent upon charity. In Bendin there are 5,000 charity subjects out of a population of 50,000, and in Dombrov 5,000 out of a population of 60,000. These figures do not include the unemployed who are receiving assistance from their former employers. The unemployed so situated number about 45,000, or, counting their families, about 100,000 persons.

Continuing, this report says that during the last five months the population of this region suffered serious epidemics of typhus, scarlet fever, dysentery and cholera. Of cholera there have been thirty-five authenticated cases, and the death rate among noncombatants has increased from 10 per cent. to 12 per cent.

Two chief causes of the misery in this region have been the cutting off of imports, upon which this part of Poland always has depended, and the closing of the coal mines, which in normal times give employment to 50,000 men.

EX-KHEDIVE IN WANT.

His Egyptian Estates Seized, He Has to Borrow Money.

GENEVA, (via Paris), May 7.—This city is one of the few places in Europe where Abbas Hilmi, the former Khedive of Egypt, appears to be welcome. The reason is that it is the headquarters of the National Egyptian party, headed by Ferrid Bey.

Distressing news reaches the party from the headquarters at Vienna and Constantinople concerning the indifference of the party followers toward the former Khedive. The enormous income which Abbas Hilmi used to receive from his properties in Egypt has been sequestrated, and his estates in Turkey today yield him nothing. Consequently he is hard put to it for ready cash, according to reports current here, and he has had to borrow to meet his personal expenses.

FAVORS WAR CONTRACT TAX

French Deputy Says His Bill Will Correct Notorious Abuses.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 7.—Deputy Henri Connevol, the author of the proposed law to revise all State contracts and impose a retroactive tax on those over $1,000, publishes a letter in the Temps defending his proposal against criticism. He maintains the equity of his suggestion that those profiting by the war should pay a share of their gains, and says the bill simply puts in practice suggestions which have long been current among members of Parliament who have been dissatisfied with the conduct of Government business. He says it is notorious that scandalous abuses and illegal commissions have existed, and that his bill will cleanse the nation's business department.

The Temps reiterates the objection, which it considers fatal, that the Connevol bill would involve inextricable confusion and enormously damage the credit of France, especially abroad.

AERIAL BOMBS FALL IN CONSTANTINOPLE

STILL SHELLING STRAIT

PARIS, May 7.—The first attack of the war on Constntinople is reported in an unofficial dispatch from Athens. It is said that three Russian aviators flew over the city, dropping several bombs which are believed to have caused extensive damage.

The message says also that the Russian Black Sea Fleet bombarded the Turkish forts on the left bank of the Bosporus on Wednesday. Several Russian shells fell within about ten miles of Constantinople.

DARDANELLES, Thursday, May 6, (via London, May 7.)—The artillery exchanges between the warships of the Allies and the shore positions of the Turks continue.

Some vessels are firing from the Gulf of Saros, making use of the incendiary shells. The town of Maidos was set on fire yesterday.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 5, (By Wireless to Berlin and London, May 7.)—The following statement regarding the operations in the Dardanelles was issued last night by the Turkish War Office:

"An enemy battalion was annihilated Wednesday as the result of an attack by our troops against his left wing.

"At Sedd-el-Bahr we inflicted heavy losses on the English and captured great quantities of ammunition. We have taken ten enemy machine guns."

PREMIER'S SON INJURED AT THE DARDANELLES

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 7.—Chancellor Lloyd George announced at the anniversary dinner of the Newspaper Press Fund this evening that one of the Prime Minister's sons had been wounded, though not dangerously, in the operations at the Dardanelles.

This must refer to Arthur Asquith, who when the war broke out joined the Royal Naval Volunteer Reserves and after a brief training took part with the Navala Division in the defense of Antwerp. He holds a Lieutenant's commission.

Even during that short campaign in Belgium Lieutenant Asquith earned no small reputation. His men described him as one of the most popular officers and among the hardest workers. "His first thought," one of the men said at the time, "is for the comfort and feeling of his men. He roughs it with the boys, who think the world of him. He takes his food with them and has the same as they have. Last time I saw him he was drinking his tea from a corned beef can."

ALLIES PAST THE NARROWS?

Forts Up to Nagara Thought to be Out of Action.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

RABBIT ISLANDS, May 4, (via Mytilene, May 5, dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle).—Yesterday, the ninth day of the bombardment of the Dardanelles was marked by an interesting happening. Late in the afternoon, from a point farther north than this, I saw on three occasions warships pass the Narrows at Nagara.

The first to pass was a destroyer and the second was a cruiser. On the third occasion the ship I noticed was probably a cruiser returning. These ships could not possibly have been Turkish war vessels for they came and went without drawing fire and with the progress made by the Allied fleet in the destruction of the forts it is in the highest degree unlikely that Turkish ships would venture now so far down the Dardanelles.

It would appear certain, therefore, that the great Narrows forts of Chanak and Killd Bahr have been silenced, while those on both sides of the waterway up to Nagara are probably also out of action. But while the Turks still retain their hold on the land on both sides of the straits, thus being able to make use of mobile batteries, it is unlikely that the Allied fleet will pass the Narrows in force. Beyond that part of the strait are undoubtedly mine fields, and though the chain of forts comes to an end with Nagara, the shores beyond this side of the waterway will have to be thoroughly cleared.

The Turkish lines appear to be on the heights and slopes of Tree Hill, and the British are in the neighborhood of Anined Krithia. Landing here on an island in the Rabbit group I witnessed a heavy bombardment of Tree Hill. As far as could be seen the Turks intrenched there made no reply. The ships' fire thoroughly searched the whole position of the enemy.

At sunset, just when the ships' forms and the headlands flanking the strait were dying into deep shadows, an exciting encounter was seen. The Turks under cover of the dusk evidently brought a battery of guns down the road through the Mendere Valley to the Asiatic side, with a front toward Yeni Shehr. Suddenly two enormous sports of water flew skywards close to three battleships firing from a point near Sedd-el Bahr. One shot went too far, the second being short, but before the third shot, with which the gunner usually expects to hit, could be fired the ships had potted the battery and were pouring a deluge of huge shells on the d[illegible]s Turks.

It was sha[illegible]l exciting work. I could see th[illegible]y being chased by tremendous s[illegible]bursts, right up the valley toward, I should think, Yenkiss.

It was a splendid piece of gunnery by our ships. One has only to see the nature of the country on both sides of the Dardanelles front from a point close by to understand the great advantage the defending forces must have, and to realize how the complete forcing of the strait and the defeat of the Turks may be a costly and somwhat prolonged operation.

FRENCH LANDING A FEINT.

Navy Department Reports Success of the Asiatic Side Attack.

PARIS, May 7.—The Official Gazette of the Navy Department published today an account of the landing of French troops on the Asiatic side of the Dardanelles, which confirms previous reports that the purpose of this enterprise was to make a diversion while the main landing force was going ashore on the Gallipoli Peninsula.

A regiment of colonial infantry, with one battery of three-inch guns, debarked at Kum Kalessi, on the Asiatic side near the entrance to the Dardanelles. They marched upon Yeni Shehr, where they attacked a greatly superior force of Turks. Fighting continued from April 25 to 27.

The Official Gazette says the French took 500 prisoners and then retired to their ships, having fulfilled their mission of engaging the attention of the Turks while the main landing operations were being carried out in force on the European side.

JAPAN AVERTS WAR WITH CHINA

Hands in Ultimatum Deferring Disputed Questions, Which Will Be Accepted.

A SURPRISE IN PEKING

Group V. of Demands, Which China Had Rejected, Will Be Discussed Later.

LITTLE DANGER OF UPRISING

Leaders Support President Yuan—Japan Continues War Measures While Awaiting Reply.

Supreme Effort for Peace, Chinese Minister Says.

By Cable to the Editor of The New York Times.

PEKING, May 7.—In spite of a long and painful effort to bring the negotiation to a peaceful settlement, we have been informed that Japan would present an ultimatum this afternoon at 3 o'clock, and we, as heretofore, are making a supreme effort to preserve the peace of the Far East.

LU CHEN-HSIANG,
Secretary for Foreign Affairs.

PEKING, Saturday, May 8.—Japan's demands, modified in the ultimatum handed in yesterday afternoon by the withholding for future discussion of the whole of Group V., will be accepted by the Chinese Government and the crisis in the affairs of the two nations is averted for the time being.

The Attachés of the Foreign Office were at work all night translating Japan's ultimatum and drafting the terms of China's compliance with the demands, which will be submtited to Yuan Shih-kai and the State Council this morning at 10 o'clock. The reply will be delivered to M. Hioki, the Japanese Minister, this evening or Sunday morning.

The Chinese note will review China's case, answer the charges contained in the ultimatum, and accept the demands of the ultimatum without qualification.

The Government expects no serious revolutionary outbreak from the people. The military leaders have assured Yuan Shih-kai that their support would continue.

Japan's Change a Surprise.

The handing in of the Japanese ultimatum to China brought out knowledge on one point which has surprised Chinese officials as well as the members of the foreign legations here.

It seems that Japan, after insisting upon the acceptance of her demands, suspended in her ultimatum discussion of all of Group V., with the exception of the demand bearing upon Fukien Province, to which the Chinese had agreed in their reply of last Saturday. The records now show that China, Thursday evening, offered to concede to the Tokio Government more than the Japanese ultimatum now exacts from her.

It was learned that in the course of Vice Minister Tsao Yulin's last visit to the Japanese Legation he proposed verbally to meet the Japanese railroad demands; to grant school and hospital privileges; offered, to bestow land without compensation upon Japanese, and proposed to withdraw China's three requirements regarding Shantung Province, namely, the return to the status quo before the war, China's participation in the peace conference, and compensation for damages in the Kiao-Chau campaign.

China's Final Stand.

The final Chinese proposals, therefore, refused only to authorize Japan to supply half the arms used by China; to participate in the conduct of Chinese arsenals; to appoint Japanese advisers to China, and to preach Buddhism in the republic.

The Chinese dislike the requirement insisted upon by Japan that China recognize Tokio's right to reopen these questions at future date, but they will accept these features unless the few irreconcilables in the councils of President Yuan Shi-kai succeed before next Monday in altering the President's decision.

The ultimatum is a lengthy document. It complains of the Chinese attitude in advancing the argument that the Japanese position was designed in part for presentation to foreign countries. It is considered curious that the ultimatum is written only in Japanese, while all formal documents have been written both in Japanese and Chinese.

The Chinese public is quite unaware of the trend events have taken. Long lines of Chinese carts all day yesterday slowly dragged their way through the rain into the legation quarter and to the railroad stations, taking bullion and other articles of value to be placed under foreign protection.

Japan's Concessions.

TOKIO, May 7.—In presenting its ultimatum to China, Japan omitted from the present negotiations all items in Group V. of the amended list of demands, with the exception of the portion dealing with concessions in Fukien, on which an agreement already has been reached. The demands in Group V. are reserved for future discussion.

Group V. includes the stipulations against which China raised the most vigorous objections. The decision of Japan to defer these matters is made known in an official communication of 3,500 words which was issued here today in regard to the Japanese ultimatum.

The principal provisions of Group V. have to do with the appointment of Japanese military and political advisers for China and for Japanese supervision over the manufacture or purchase by China of munitions of war.

The Japanese Government has instructed Eki Hioki, Japanese Minister at Peking, to advise China to give due regard to Japan's wishes and to the conciliatory spirit of the Tokio Government, in view of which Japan believes China should give a satisfactory response.

In response to inquiries by The Associated Press, Japanese officials said they had heard nothing of any action on the part of the United States looking to mediation by that country between Japan and China. It was explained that Japan, having committed herself, must stand by her ultimatum.

If the situation should reach a stage in which mediation might be resorted to, these officials said, they believed the United States, if it took action, would first consult China. The question would then arise whether Japan would give its consent.

The impression prevails that the influence of the Elder Statesmen resulted in further concessions being made to China in the belief that the lasting interests of the empire could best be served by convincing the powers that Japan was guided by a spirit of justice and a desire for the preservation of peace in the Orient.

Japanese Push War Measures.

Pending the receipt of China's reply, military and naval preparations are being pushed vigorously. Five transports laden with troops have sailed from Hiroshima in the direction of China and numerous warships have left for secret destinations.

Waseda University has deprived Professor Ariga, Japanese Adviser to President Yuan Shih-kai, of his professorship and he has disappeared. Previously he had been denounced as a Chinese spy and the police were protecting him.

Dr. Sun Yat-sen, the first Provisional President of China, has been seen frequently in Tokio recently. The Yokohama Hochi declares that if war between Japan and China develops, the revolutionists in China, who side with Dr. Sun, are likely to seize the opportunity to strike against Yuan Shih-kai.

Some Chinese are leaving Japan, while preparations are being made by many of those in Korea to depart from that country.

The press generally deprecates the necessity of further concessions to China. Some newspapers express the fear that the impression will go abroad that the Elder Statesmen are still the power behind the throne.

More than forty warships, including the battleship Hizen and the battle cruiser Kongo, are preparing at Sasebo for possible operations against China. A second squadron, under Admiral Nawa, has arrived and is hastily embarking supplies.

Rear Admiral Kamimura's fleet, including the battleships Sagami and Suwo, was ordered to the Gulf of Pechili to be in readiness to take aboard Minister Hioki in case of necessity.

HILLS ESTATE TO CHARITY.

From her net estate of $42,343 Miss Sarah B. Hills, sister of the late James R. Hills of this city, made the following bequests to charitable and religious institutions: Seventeen thousand nine hundred and eighty-two dollars to the American Sunday School Union, and $1,000 each to the American Tract Society, the Children's Aid Society, the Hampton Institute, the Woman's Union Mission Society, the Board of Foreign Missions of the Presbyterian Church and the Board of Home Missions of the same church.

The appraisal was filed in the office of the State Controller yesterday and showed stocks and bonds aggregating $26,164; bank deposits of $6,300, personalty amounting to $1,379, and realty, incluring 213-215 Van Brunt Street and 15 Rapelyea Street, Brooklyn, each property being appraised at $6,000.

There are bequests to five nieces and nephews. The will reads in part:

"I have made the bequests to the societies and institution in fulfilment of a most sacred trust received by me from my beloved brother, who made me his sole heir and soel executrix that I might enjoy the benefits of his estate and dispose of his property in accordance with the wishes he personally expressed to me. It is to the love and generosity of this beloved brother, and his faithful care of my property that I am indebted for nearly all I possess."

A considerable amount of property was disposed of by the testatrix while alive.

PROOF NEEDED TO CONVICT.

Court Rules "Psychology" of Magistrates Is Not Enough.

Even though a Magistrate's Court may be a "psychological laboratory for qualitative analysis" of the guilt or innocence of an accused person, there must be proof of guilt submitted before a judgment of conviction is valid, according to the ruling of the Appellate Division yesterday in reversing the conviction of Lawrence Fogel. The latter was arrested and charged with having been abusive and insulting in manner in the lobby of the Hotel McAlpin on Oct. 22, 1913, and also with having approached one of the hotel guests for the purpose of engaging in a game of chance in matching coins. He was convicted in the Magistrate's Court, which was sustained in the Court of General Sessions, but reversed yesterday in the Appellate Division.

In its decision the Court of General Sessions referred to the fact of the frequency with which unconvicted "crooks" parade before Magistrates, who in time become experts on that type of men. It also made the remark about the "psychological laboratory."

The Appellate Division held that there was not sufficient proof submitted to substantiate the charges against Fogel. The Appellate Court decision read in part:

"The courts have not yet reached the point where they will affirm a judgment of conviction simply because the defendant was, without his consent, made an exhibit in the case, or because the trial court is a 'psychological laboratory for qualitative analysis of the guilt or innocence of the accused person.'"

EXPLOSION AFTER SUICIDE.

Policeman Burned Severely on Entering Gas-Filled Room.

Patrolman Walter C. Rosendale of the West Thirty-seventh Street Station was called yesterday to 238 West Thirty-eighth Street, where Solomon Goldberg, who has a laundry at that address, told him that he smelled gas coming from the room of a young man who rented the room yesterday.

Rosendale broke in the door of the room, and as he crossed the threshold he stepped on a match. There was a loud explosion and the policeman was burned severely. Firemen soon put out the fire which followed the explosion.

Dr. Dineen of New York Hospital found the body of a young man, fully dressed, lying on the bed in the room, and gas was escaping from a tube attached to a gas jet. Rosendale was taken to Bellevue Hospital, where it was said his condition was serious.

The young man who killed himself gave no name when he rented the room. He left no letters, and nothing was found to establish his identity. He was about 28 years old, 5 feet 7 inches in height, and weighed 125 pounds. He had dark brown hair and wore a blue suit and a brown cap.

Mrs. Murname Sues Brooklyn Surgeon for Alleged Carelessness.

A suit to recover $10,000 damages because a wad of gauze was left in her wound after an operation was brought by Mrs. Margaret Murname of 656 Carroll Street, Brooklyn, yesterday against Dr. Lewis Wallace Pearson before Justice Isaac M. Kapper and a jury in the Supreme Court in Brooklyn. Late in the afternoon the jury was instructed by the Court to hand in a sealed verdict, which will be opened when Justice Kapper convenes court this morning.

An operation was performed on Mrs. Murname by Dr. Pearson on March 31, 1913, in the Samaritan Hospital. A second operation several months later, after Mrs. Murname became seriously ill, disclosed the wad of gauze. Dr. Pearson said he instructed an assistant to remove the gauze. The surgeon said he did not remove the gauze, nor see it removed, but explained that surgeons must depend on their aids to attend to these details. He disclaimed all responsibility for the neglect of his assistant in failing to follow his instructions.

RUSSIANS CUT OFF, AUSTRIANS REPORT

CZAR'S BIG ARMY IN FLIGHT

VIENNA, May 7, (via London.)—The following official statement was issued by the War Office tonight:

The Austro-Hungarian and German troops have crossed the Wisloka River in the district between Pilzno and Jaslo. The advanced troops are south of Jaslo.

Strong Austrian troops in the Dukla-Rymanow district bar the Carpathian roads along which the Russians in irregular columns are retreating in a northern and northeastern direction, pursued by the allied army advancing across the Beskids.

The number of prisoners and amount of booty are increasing. Our Tenth Corps yesterday captured five heavy and sixteen light cannon.

Our troops in the eastern section of the Carpathian front are repulsing, in the meantime, desperate Russian attacks, with heavy losses to the enemy. A Russian attack yesterday against Ostry Height was repulsed by our artillery. We captured 1,300 prisoners. Several detachments were annihilated by our flanking fire.

In Southeast Galicia all attempts of the enemy to take several vantage points have failed.

BERLIN, May 7, (via London.)—The German General Staff today issued the following in regard to the operations in West Galicia and the Carpathians:

In the southeastern theatre the battles on the right bank of the lower Dunajec ended yesterday in complete success for the allied troops. The enemy is engaged in the quickest possible retreat toward the east. Only a small division of the enemy on the Vistula still holds out.

Further to the south we advanced on the right bank of the Wisloka River in the direction of Wislok and across the Jaslinka. Many times parts of the right wing of the army under General von Mackensen came in touch with the Russian column coming from the Carpathian front, west of Lupkow Pass. The Russians are hastily retreating before the closely following Austro-German troops. With every step forward out booty increases.

VENICE, May 7.—Field Marshal Conrad von Hoetzendorf, Chief of Staff of the Austrian Army, is credited by the Vienna Reichspost with having made all the strategic preparations for the Austro-German attack in the Carpathians.

This operation was carried out so nearly according to program, the paper says, that the Archdukes Frederick and Charles Ferdinand, Baron Conrad, and the entire General Staff went on a special train to witness the victory they felt certain the Teutonic allies would win.

Austro-Hungarian troops were used exclusively on the northern line, while the Germans supported them to the south.

PETROGRAD, May 7.—Concerning the fighting in the southeastern area, the War Office this evening issued the following:

In Galicia, between the Vistula and the Carpathians, fighting continues with the same desperation and has assumed the character of a great battle. In this region the arrival of several German army corps has been revealed.

In the direction of Mezo Laborcz we repulsed with the bayonet six vigorous enemy attacks. The number of the enemy's wounded and captured in the region of Makuvka is increasing.

In the valley of the Lomnitza we also have gained important successes.

CLAIM VICTORIES IN NORTH.

Both Russians and Germans Report Continued Success in Poland.

PETROGRAD, May 7.—The following official communication was issued this evening:

In the region of Mitau (Courtland) our troops have continued to press the enemy closely.

In the direction of Mlawa we have continued to develop the success recently achieved. In this district yesterday we occupied the villages of Marcisze and Grzymki, and repulsed three counter attacks. Repeated attempts of the German to recapture the farm of Pomicany were barren of results.

The enemy yesterday attempted to cross the Pilica in the region of Kozlovetz, but was repulsed by our fire.

BERLIN, May 7, (via London.)—The following statement was issued today by the German General Staff:

The battles to the south of Szadow and east of Rossieny ended in a decided defeat for the Russians, who suffered heavy losses. In prisoners alone they lost 1,500 men, and are in full retreat.

South of Kalwarya, south of Augustowo and west of Przasnysz part of the attacks were repulsed by us with sanguinary losses. In these battles the Russians lost altogether 520 prisoners.

OCCUPY 46,000 SQUARE MILES.

More Than 5,000,000 Population in Russian Territory Held by Foes.

"Germans and Austrians occupy approximately 46,000 square miles of Russian territory, containing a population of more than 5,000,000, according to the Hahmburger Nachrichten, which quotes the war press headquarters reports. These are the different provinces: Kalish, 9,961.3 square versts, 1,183,800 inhabitants; Petrikau, 10,763 square versts, 1,981,366 inhabitants; Kielce, 4,434.3 square versts, 486,600 inhabitants; Radom, 1,646 square versts, 148,400 inhabitants; Warsaw, 5,832.5 square versts, 624,900 inhabitants; Plozk, 8,216 square versts, 555,000 inhabitants; Lomza, 2,816.5, 172,120 inhabitants; Suwalki, 5,412.2 square versts, 340,700 inhabitants."

ENGINEER SUES STOKES.

Bolton Says He Was Charged Falsely with Aiding a Trust.

Reginald Pelham Bolton, a consulting engineer, sued W. E. D. Stokes in the Supreme Court yesterday for $70,000 for damages. Mr. Stokes is accused of having said that Mr. Bolton was interested in an elevator trust, and that was why he was so active at a hearing before a special committee of the Aldermen on an ordinance to compel the placing of safety devices on all elevators.

Mr. Bolton said he was not in the employ of any elevator concern and that the alleged statement of Mr. Stokes greatly injured him.

The American Civic League will hold a mass meeting at Cooper Union next Tuesday night. David M. Neuberger, President of the Everard Brewing Company and one of the active men connected with the brewing industry engaged in anti-prohibition propaganda, will be the principal speaker.

BRITAIN TO PROHIBIT SALE OF RAW SPIRITS

Government Abandons the Tax Plan—No Wine or Beer Duties.

LONDON, May 7.—The following official communication was issued this evening by the British Government:

"As most mischief is done by raw, cheap spirits of a fiery quality, the Government proposes to substitute for their taxing proposal a complete prohibition of the sale of spirits less than three years old.

"The trade will receive time to provide for storage.

"The beer duties are withdrawn without modification.

The proposals introduced in the House of Commons on April 29 by David Lloyd George, Chancellor of the Exchequer, concerning the taxes on alcoholic beverages, provided for the doubling of the duty on spirits, the quadrupling of the duty on wines, and the institution of a graduated tax on beer. These proposals were strongly opposed.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 7.—Under the heading "Is England Becoming Protectionist?" the Eclair in an editorial attacks Lloyd George's projected wine taxes (officially abandoned today.) The writer says the taxes will complete the ruin begun by Germans in the champagne district, and appeals to England to spare France's greatest industry. The rest of the press regards the situation calmly.

The usually well-informed Petit Parisien says that the French Government will propose a law interdicting the sale of all liquors containing alcohol. It is considered likely that the wine industry will receive compensations to enable it to face this prohibition measure, which will probably be only temporary.

Georges Clemenceau, in L'Homme Enchaine, devotes his leading editorial to a panegyric of Lloyd George, whom he compares with the French Ministers, to the latters' disadvantage. M. Clemenceau says the British Chancellor of the Exchequer recently wrote him thus: "Four years ago at Carlsbad you predicted what was coming. I did not believe you. Now I admit my mistake." M. Clemenceau says that Lloyd George is giving the world the supreme example of how England repairs her errors when once she begins to follow the right course.

MORATORIUM SAVED HOTELS

Without This Aid Most Paris Hostelries Would Have Failed.

Had it not been for the moratorium in France, most of the hotels in Paris would have had to fail, according to a letter received yesterday at the Plaza by C. Hauswirth, who was assistant manager of the Plaza Hotel, Paris, when the war started, from R. Armbruster, the proprietor of that hotel.

M. Armbruster says the Paris hotel managers are hopeful of some American travel this Summer. His hotel, which shut down at the beginning of the war, reopened in December, and now has forty guests at war prices, though work is proceeding on a 200-room addition.

WAR GIVES US IRISH SAND.

Subway Contractors Buy Ballast to Fill in Bronx Excavation.

As a result of the war, Irish sand is being incorporated with the soil of the Bronx. So light are the cargoes that are being sent to this country from Europe under present conditions that steamships have been forced to load sand as ballast.

Rodgers & Hagerty, Incorporated, who have the subway construction contract for the Lexington Avenue division running from 138th Street to 157th Street, obtained about ten scowloads of the sand, and floated it up to the Bronx.

Minister May Win Back Wife.

The suit of Mrs. Margaret Lee, wife of the Rev. Burton H. Lee, chaplain of Sing Sing prison, for a separation was to be tried before Justice Page in the Supreme Court yesterday. Many friends of both husband and wife were present in the courtroom, but the case went over until next week. It was said that a reconciliation might be effected.

SETS HURDLES FOR ROOSEVELT'S CASE

Colonel Must Prove Printing Fraud and Barnes's Knowledge of Its Existence.

COURT'S SWEEPING RULE

LYON WITNESS EXPLAINS

Asserts That Testimony as to Commissions Was Too Sweeping—Printing Expert Testifies.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, May 7.—The third week of the Barnes-Roosevelt libel trial ended this afternoon with the admission of John M. Bowers, chief counsel for Colonel Roosevelt to Justice Andrews that his case practically was completed and that he would finish it by noon on Monday.

Within that time, in order to show justification of the alleged libel, Colonel Roosevelt's counsel, according to Justice Andrews, must produce proof of three things: First, that the J. B. Lyon Printing Company of Albany practiced waste, extravagance, and fraud in connection with State printing contracts; second, that William Barnes knew of or shared in that extravagance and fraud, and, third, that it was brought about by the exercise of Mr. Barnes's political influence.

Justice Andrews made this ruling this afternoon after Mr. Bowers had argued long and earnestly that all matters relating to State and Albany County and city printing be received in evidence. The Justice told Mr. Bowers that he would permit the evidence to go into the record, but unless it was shown clearly that Mr. Barnes was connected with it in the manner indicated he would strike it all out. The Justice also ruled that the mere fact that Mr. Barnes was a stockholder in the J. B. Lyon Printing Company was not sufficient evidence to connect him with the printing contracts.

This ruling is by far the most important Justice Andrews has made since his refusal to dismiss the complaint, for it is on the printing evidence alone that the defense has depended to show justification. With this stricken out of the records the lawyers for the defense must rest their case entirely upon mitigation, in which event the Justice may direct the jury to bring in a verdict leaving to it to determine only the amount of money to be assessed against Colonel Roosevelt.

Colonel Roosevelt's counsel plainly were taken aback at the attitude of the court. Although they had won a victory in getting the evidence into the record, it will be valueless if they comply with the ruling. Those who have followed the evidence that has been produced say that Mr. Bowers will have great difficulty in connecting Mr. Barnes with the printing scandals in the manner indicated by the court. Mr. Bowers contends, however, that there is already sufficient evidence in the record to show justification.

The whole matter will be argued on Monday, as the Justice told each side to go through the evidence and get it in shape for easy presentation. One crumb of comfort which the Roosevelt forces got out of the ruling was the statement of the Court that either direct or circumstantial evidence could be presented.

The Justice's decision sent the Roosevelt lawyers scurrying through the vast amount of evidence that has already been produced. Mr. Bowers will attempt to show that Mr. Barnes had knowledge of waste and corruption in printing contracts on these grounds; that he had been on the Lyon payroll for two years at $10,000 a year, and that, as it has been alleged, through his political influence, Mr. Barnes was able to obtain State printing contracts and turn them over to the Lyon concern; that he held 750 shares of stock in this concern, that his Albany Journal company obtained contracts for city and county printing and sublet them to the Argus and other companies and in that way received commissions; that the Lyon Company was able to outbid its rivals for Legislative printing and through subsidiary concerns obtain practically a monopoly of the work; that Mr. Barnes appealed to Thomas C. Platt to use his influence to get State printing contracts and that he also appealed to Colonel Roosevelt when Governor, not to establish a State printing house.

All these matters have been testified to in one way and another and coupled with the fact that he expects to be able to show that Mr. Barnes was dominant in Republican politics during this time, Mr. Bowers believes that Justice Andrews will allow all the printing evidence to remain in the record.

Ivins Pleases the Colonel.

It was a tiresome day for all connected with the case, for when the lawyers were not arguing, experts were going over the details of printing matters or digging out items from old ledgers and journals. One incident injected a bit of life into the proceedings. While a witness was giving expert opinion on the kinds of type used in printing State documents, William M. Ivins leaned over the shoulder of Colonel Roosevelt, and, presenting him a little green-covered book, said with his pervasive smile:

"I came across this yesterday, Colonel, and it struck me it was a first-class translation, and that if you cared to amuse yourself with anything of this sort while this uninteresting technical testimony is going on, you might enjoy it."

It was a translation of "The Acharnians" and other plays of Aristophanes. The Colonel's face lighted with joy.

"Thank you, thank you. I certainly am de-light-ed, Mr. Ivins," he said, beamingly.

For the rest of the afternoon the Colonel's chuckle proclaimed that he appreciated Mr. Ivins's gift.

The Roosevelt lawyers assert that they managed to establish today that the State was charged twice for bills and reports printed from type that had been set only once, and that the volumes thus turned out were mere reprints; that in printing the reports of the Albany Common Council meetings large type was used, thereby necessitating thousands of unnecessary pages; that a great deal of unnecessary matter was printed in the books containing claims against the Albany County Board of Supervisors, as the claims did not have to be printed, and that a great deal of the work turned out by the Lyon Company was much more costly than it should have been.

The morning session started with Charles M. Winchester, Vice President and General Manager of the J. B. Lyon Company, on the witness stand for the eighth time. He produced transcripts from the Lyon Company ledger of payments made to and received from The Journal Company for the years 1903 to 1912. The witness said that it contained the record of all transactions with The Journal Company that he could find.

The lawyers went over the items carefully, and at the afternoon session it was brought out that for job printing work and some special legislative printing, which The Journal Company had done, the Lyon Company received during the nine years $37,328.94. The witness said he had not brought with him the stubs of checks for 1906, but had brought all but two of the canceled checks to show payment.

Explains About Commissions.

Upon cross-examination the witness said he had not meant to testify the other day that his firm paid The Journal Company commissions on State work. He said:

"I intended to say that we paid The Journal commissions on work which can be given without contract. That work has never been under contract, according to the State law. This can be given by the departments to whomsoever they please. When The Journal got it for us we gave them a trade discount."

"Then you did not pay The Journal commissions on contracts the State made with you?"

"No, Sir."

"Or the county or the City of Albany?"

"No."

Mr. Winchester said that the J. B. Lyon company had at times had its bills for work returned by the Board of Supervisors and had then sent the bills to The Journal Company. He said that all claims against the City of Albany were passed on by a committee of the citizens before they were paid.

Henry J. Horne, Chief of the Bureau of Printing of Columbia University, then took the stand, and Stewart E. Hancock for the Roosevelt forces sought to show that it was not necessary to have claims printed in the journal of the Board of Supervisors of Albany. The court ruled that the witness was not competent to pass on such a matter. Mr. Ivins said that the claims were printed according to statute requirements. When Mr. Hancock continued to argue the court said:

"I will allow you a very wide latitude. I will allow you to put in this evidence, but I may rule later that it is not competent."

"But you can't blot out yesterday, and you can't create tomorrow," interposed Mr. Ivins. "Whether you strike this evidence from the record or not, once it is in it must leave an indelible impression on the minds of the jurors."

"I think that if I request this jury to disregard this evidence it will follow my instructions," said the court.

The witness was then asked to give his opinion concerning the "ecclesiastical records of the State of New York."

Mr. Hancock maintained that the company charged the State far more for the work than it should have done, and when Mr. Ivins objected the court said:

"I will receive the evidence, provided that you show that Mr. Barnes improperly influenced the State Printing Board to pay this bill in order to obtain an extra profit for the J. B. Lyon Company."

Most of the afternoon session was taken up by Mr. Bowers's argument that he already had shown Mr. Barnes's connection with State printing contracts and that the printing charges were justified.

What Colonel Must Prove.

"The question in my mind," said the Justice, "is simply this: You expect to show that the Lyon company was guilty of waste and extravagance in the printing of these records, and that their bills to the State were wrong, as the State was overcharged something like 25 per cent. The evidence would be competent if you showed, first, that the printing of the books were wasteful; if you showed that there was fraud, and if you showed that Mr. Barnes knew of the waste and fraud and that he used his influence with the members of the State Printing Board to get the contracts."

Mr. Bowers contended that he already had produced evidence to show that Mr. Barnes knew what the Lyon Company was doing when it printed the records and, as he said, overcharged the State. Again and again the Justice returned to the point that the defense would have to show specifically, either by direct or circumstantial evidence, that Mr. Barnes had knowledge of any corruption. Mr. Bowers wanted to know if the Justice's ruling applied simply to the printing of the ecclesiastical reports or to all the printing matter.

"You don't need to argue on the whole printing matter until you get in all your evidence on the subject," said the Court, "and you have marshaled all your facts. I prefer to wait until next week for that."

After the records of payments by the Lyon Company to The Journal Company for job work were put in evidence Justice Andrews asked Mr. Bowers:

"Now you are practically through with your case?"

"Yes, your Honor," replied Mr. Bowers.

The Court then asked both lawyers to get their evidence in such shape that they could present it in handy form when they argued on Monday as to whether or not the printing matter should stay in the record. Both agreed to do so and court was adjourned until Monday morning.

SUBWAY MUST GIVE SEATS.

Health Board's Order Says Only One-third May Stand in Car.

The Board of Health issued yesterday its anti-crowding order to the Interborough concerning the Subway. It has laid down the same standard for it as for the street cars—that is, that sufficient cars are to be run to provide seats for at least two out of every three passengers. It is recognized, however, that there are certain hours of the day at which this is impossible, and the company is bidden in these to regulate the carrying of passengers so as not to permit more congestion than is inevitable.

The reason assigned for this order is the danger to health through overcrowding and especially the spread of diseases of the respiratory organs. It was pointed out yesterday that the Public Service Commission was already requiring the Subway in the non-rush hours to operate sufficient cars in each twenty-minute period to seat all the passengers, a much more stringent regulation than that of Commissioner Goldwater.

Theodore P. Shonts, President of the New York Railways Company, has written to the Commissioner concerning the overcrowding order on the Sixth Avenue street cars. He said that he was running all the cars he could, but that it was not possible for the employes of the New York Railways Company to eject from the cars passengers who forced their way on when the Board of Health's limit had been reached. So he asked the Commissioner to place policemen or inspectors on the cars to enforce the Board of Health's order.

Dr. Goldwater replied to Mr. Shonts, saying his letter filled him with amazement, and the Board of Health could not recede from the position concerning the Sixth Avenue line it had taken.

JUSTICE INGRAHAM FAVORS THAW JURY

GIVES VIEWS FROM BENCH

Court Hears Arguments on Writ Restraining the Beginning of Trial Set for May 17.

Presiding Justice of the Appellate Division George P. Ingraham went on record yesterday as being in favor of a jury trial in the Supreme Court to determine the sanity of Harry K. Thaw.

It was during the argument of attorneys for Thaw and the Attorney General's Office to have the Appellate Court determine whether a writ of prohibition should be made permanent, restraining Supreme Court Justice Hendrick from proceeding to a jury trial that the opinion of the Presiding Justice was delivered from the Bench.

"There is no question that jury trials," said the Justice, "under such proceedings as this have been had hundreds of times since I have been on the Bench." The Justice interrupted the arguments at one stage of the proceedings and, addressing John B. Stanchfield, attorney for Thaw, said: "You do not have to argue that further, so far as I am concerned."

Justice Hendrick, in the lower court, has already set May 17 for the beginning of a jury trial, and will proceed with it unless the Appellate Court makes permanent an alternative writ of prohibition, which at present restrains the impaneling of a jury in the case.

The contention of the Attorney General's office is that Justice Hendrick was without jurisdiction to have the case brought before a jury, and that the Justice alone could determine the question, without the help of a jury.

The State's brief reads, in part:

"There is nothing in the insanity laws which makes provision for a trial by jury in such a proceeding as that pending before Justice Hendrick. Those laws point to the conclusion that a jury is unauthorized and unwarranted. The responsibility and power are vested in the court or Judge alone to determine whether the prisoner shall be discharged. A jury trial under a writ of habeas corpus would be an anomaly. There is no authority for it under the common law. There is none for it under the statutes."

Mr. Stanchfield, in his brief, said:

"It was entirely proper and within the power and discretion of the court to bring the questions arising upon the issues in the habeas corpus proceeding as to the sanity of Harry K. Thaw, and to direct the submission thereof to a jury. The decision of Justice Hendrick was, therefore, in all respects in accordance with the law."

Mr. Stanchfield recited a number of precedents in his brief to support his contention.

He also quoted a decision of Justice Hendrick in the habeas corpus proceeding, in which the jurist said he would grant a jury trial as a "help" to him in deciding the sanity of Thaw and in an "advisory capacity."

"There was no intimation then," queried Justice Laughlin, one of the five Appellate Court Justices, sitting in the case, "that the Judge would override the powers allowed him in that decision, was there?"

"None whatever," answered Mr. Stanchfield.

SCRAPBOOKS AS EVIDENCE.

150 Papers Used in Court to Contest Marconi Company's Suit.

Yesterday's session of the trial of the injunction suit brought by the Marconi Telegraph Company against the Atlantic Communication Company in the United States District Court, Brooklyn, was given over largely to the hearing of testimony by Greenleaf Whittier Pickard, an expert for the defendant corporation. The plaintiff alleges an infringement of its patents by the Atlantic Communication Company at the wireless telegraph plant at Sayville, L. I.

There was a lively skirmish between counsel yesterday when the defense introduced more than 150 papers as exhibits, each of which is to be explained by Mr. Pickard. Counsel for the Marconi Company objected to the exhibits being introduced in bound volumes, but the court ruled that they could be so submitted, with the privilege to counsel of objecting to any part of the evidence as it was brought up by the witness. The exhibits consist of drawings, patent records and articles from electrical and trade publications.

Mr. Pickard, qualifying as an expert, said he was a graduate of Harvard University and the Massachusetts Institute of Technology and a fellow of the American Institute of Engineers. In 1899 he was appointed by the Smithsonian Institution to investigate radiotelegraphy, and he had also been connected with the American Telephone and Telegraph Company. Mr. Pickard used a drawing board three feet square to illustrate his testimony, and introduced each drawing as an exhibit.

The wireless sets which are to be used by the defense in court were connected up yesterday and made ready for operation.

Moves Constitutional Amendment to Prohibit "Fighting Exhibitions" in This State.

TO REVISE MERIT LAW

Two Amendments Introduced in Albany Convention—Plan to Suspend All Impeached Officials.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 7.—Lemuel E. Quigg, once a leading figure in the Republican State organization, now a delegate to the Constitutional Convention from the Senatorial district which includes Columbia County, where he has a Summer home, introduced an amendment today prohibiting the passage of any law permitting prize fighting or the sale of tickets to prize fights or fighting exhibitions. The amendment was referred to the Legislative Powers Committee, of which William Barnes is Chairman.

"I consider prize fighting a brutal and degrading practice," said Mr. Quigg to THE TIMES correspondent. "Prize fights should be prohibited and I hold that the decent citizens of this State have the right to establish standards of morality through the Constitution."

Mr. Quigg told about reporting the Sullivan-Kilrain fight in New Orleans when he was a young reporter, and how the brutality of that contest shocked him.

"I have seen several exhibitions at Madison Square Garden," Mr. Quigg said. "I have not changed my mind about such contests. All these affairs are either fights or frauds, and in either event they ought to be stopped for the protection of the public. Prize fights tend to create gunmen and disorder.

"In this country Congress should order all the fighting that is to be done. In Germany all the fighting should be done by Mr. Hohenzollern, in Russia by Mr. Romanoff, and in England by Mr. Guelph, and so on."

"Do you expect that the Constitution will be amended in accord with your proposal?"

"If it ever comes before the convention it will pass," he replied with an air of assurance.

Mr. Quigg introduced an amendment to the civil service clause of the Constitution, making all appointments and promotions in the civil service of the State subject to competitive examination, except in the case of appointments made by the Governor, at the direction of the Legislature, or with the consent of the Senate.

Another civil service amendment was presented by Albert B. Unger, a Democrat from New York City. This provides for the appointment of the man at the head of the competitive list in all instances, except when a civil service commission, composed of four members selected on the bi-partisan plan, shall sanction an exception to the rule.

Ray B. Smith, Republican, of Onondaga County, introduced an amendment debarring officials against whom articles of impeachment have been filed from continuing in the exercise of their official functions pending trial. At present that restraint is imposed by the Constitution only in the case of Justices who have been impeached. William Sulzer continued to act as Governor after he had been impeached.

MAY TAKE UP SUFFRAGE.

Debate Likely in Albany When Committee Reports.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 7.—It was predicted at the Capitol tonight that woman suffrage would become a live topic of debate in the Constitutional Convention before many days have passed. The clash may come next week when the Suffrage Committee, it is expected, will make its report.

The Parsons resolution, the essential feature of which the advocates of woman suffrage at a hearing yesterday approved, would commit the convention to a "hands-off" policy with regard to the suffrage question. It was learned today that the resolution was regarded by many delegates as too broad and that Louis Marshall had been asked to draft a resolution which the Suffrage Committee might report as a substitute. Mr. Marshall, while not denying that the request had been made, would not discuss the matter or make any manner of comment on woman suffrage.

"The convention has no right to remain silent on such a vital question as that involved in woman suffrage," said one of the most influential of the delegates today. This statement from a man close to the leaders of the Republican majority, following an intimation of President Root that he believed there should be a discussion of the question, has been accepted as an indication that a suffrage debate will not be long delayed.

Neither Senator Root nor any leader in the convention believes that a debate on woman suffrage would involve a breach of faith on the part of the convention. There is no intention on the part of the leaders to force a formal vote, and there is no doubt that the platform pledges of both Republicans and Democrats will be carried out to the letter.

WOMEN'S VOTE ON SUFFRAGE

W. T. Dunmore Would Have Them Decide on Question Before the Men.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 7.—Women would have the right to vote on the proposed suffrage amendment if the Constitutional Convention should adopt a proposal presented at the session today by Watson T. Dunmore, a Republican Delegate from Oneida County. Mr. Dunmore's proposal provides that no resolution or amendment for extending or enlarging the right to vote which may be adopted by the people shall take effect until after it has been submitted to the persons to whom it would extend the right of ballot and shall have been approved by a majority of them. The proposal directs the enactment of laws providing for the registration of such voters and the counting of the votes cast at such an election.

At the request of Register John J. Hopper of New York, formerly Chairman of the Independence League State Committee, Seth Low today introduced a proposal to amend the Constitution so as to permit proportionate representation and preferential voting. Some of the leading men in the convention declare that the plan seems too fanciful to them, and Mr. Low, himself, declared that he was by no means committed to it. Under a system of proportional voting all the parties casting a vote of any size would have representation in deliberative bodies in proportion to the number of votes cast by the members in an election.

EXILED FROM THE STATE.

Court Suspends Sentence on Lawyer Who Must Leave New York.

On his promise to leave the State, George C. Jeffery, a lawyer, of 180 McDonough Street, Brooklyn, escaped a prison term yesterday after he pleaded guilty to grand larceny in the second degree before County Judge Lewis. The court suspended sentence because it was Jeffery's first offense and he made full restitution to a woman client whom he robbed.

Jeffery was indicted on a charge of grand larceny in the first degree. The indictment charged him with stealing $583 from Mrs. Regina Leeks, which she gave him to pay off a mortgage on her property. When he was informed he would have to leave the State to obtain a suspended sentence he asked the court's permission to visit his relatives here occasionally. The request was granted. It is understood that a relative in the West has offered him a place and he has accepted it.

Woman, 101, Has First Auto Ride.

Sights of New York City and the lights of Broadway were revealed in bewildering confusion last evening to Mrs. Edward Conklin, 101 years old, the oldest resident of the Greenpoint section of Brooklyn. She was taken from her home on Franklin Street by a friend, Uriah Boch, in an automobile, across the Queensboro Bridge, then through Broadway and to the Pennsylvania Station. This was her first ride in an automobile. She was on her way to Boonesboro, Md., where she will make her home. Mrs. Conklin was born in lower Manhattan. In 1865, after the death of her husband, she went to Greenpoint to live. Only once or twice since had she made a trip to Manhattan, and hence nearly everything she saw was new to her.

LETTER THREATENS SLAIN BOY'S SISTER

Three More Communications Signed "Jack the Ripper" Received by Mrs. Murray.

ONE MAILED NEAR HER HOME

Truckman Identifies Italian as Man He Saw Near Scene of Crime on Day of the Murder.

A letter, threatening the death of Mamie Murray, the eight-year-old sister of little Charles Murray, who was slain by a "Jack the Ripper" in the hallway of his home, 270 First Avenue, near Sixteenth Street, last Monday night, was received yesterday afternoon by Mrs. Nicholas Murray, mother of the little girl. The letter was postmarked 2:30 P. M., and was delivered to the mother shortly after. Because it appeared that the writer could not be many blocks away from the Murray home, the police were notified quickly and Inspector Faurot, Acting Captain Gildea, and a squad of detectives immediately started to trace the letter.

Inspector Faurot, who has had charge of the "ripper" search from the beginning, is now devoting his time solely to this case. He makes his headquarters at the Second Branch, Forty-second Street and Lexington Avenue. Police Commissioner Woods late yesterday announced that the policeman who should catch the "ripper" would receive "honorable mention."

In the morning two threatening letters, similar to previous ones, were received by the distracted mother of the last "ripper" victim. These were turned over to the police before their contents were ascertained by reporters. When the last letter was received, however, a reporter for THE TIMES was talking with Mr. Murray. The letter was brought to the Murray flat by the postman and his rapping on the door attracted Mrs. Murray from another part of the house. She received the letter against her husband's protest. The postmark showed it went through Station D at Fourth Avenue and Twelfth Street, not many blocks away. It read:

Written on Typewriter.

May 7, 1915.

"Mrs. Murray: Your little girl will be killed in a few days if you do not call off the police. I remain, Jack the Ripper."

The letter was written with a black record typewriter ribbon on a sheet of ruled paper. The possibilities of finding the writer are greater because the typewriter will afford a better means of identification than handwriting.

The other two letters were received by Mrs. Murray in the morning delivery at 10 o'clock. One was mailed from the Hudson Terminal Post Office and the other from the General Post Office at the Pennsylvania Station. Mr. and Mrs. Murray were able to recall parts of these letters. Substantially one read:

"I am the man who killed your boy. The police are a lot of boobs, and I am going to do it again. (Signed) A, Rich."

The other contained this sentence: "I will do the same thing over again on Monday in the neighborhood of Fiftieth and Fifty-fourth Streets, between Fifth and Eleventh Avenues."

Inclosed in the latter note was a newspaper picture of little Charles Murray. These letters were taken to Police Headquarters, where they were photographed.

Early in the forenoon a young woman, dressed in a neat brown suit and wearing a hat to match, stationed herself on the sidewalk opposite the Murray home. A small girl, wearing a blue coat and blue hat, who arrived with her, crossed the street and walked up and down in front of 270 First Avenue. The child paced the sidewalk all day long, and watching her across the street was the young woman in brown.

When asked what she was doing the young woman said she had brought the child there as a "decoy for the ripper." They had come from the Bronx, she said, to "help catch the murderer." The young woman said she was Miss Anna Selzan, 384 East 158th Street, and her decoy was Margaret Berchers of the same address.

Cumonella Identified.

When Antonio Cumonella, 45 years old, a shoemaker, arrested at the Olive Tree Inn, East Twenty-third Street, near First Avenue, a little while after the murder of Charles Murray, was arraigned yesterday before Magistrate Murphy in the Yorkville Court, Detective McMullen said that the prisoner, before being informed of the cause of his arrest, had cried out: "Me no kill boy." According to the detective, he had protested his innocence constantly in his cell. The detectives further said that John Glibben, a truckman, 503 East Nineteenth Street, who saw a man leaving the hallway of the Murray home just before the body of little Charles was found, went to the prison and picked the shoemaker out of ten men as the one he had seen leaving the hall. Cumonella was sent to Bellevue for observation.

The detectives questioned several suspects during the day. James Mathes, 26 years old, of 294 First Avenue, was taken into custody by Detective Brady of the Second Branch while he was in front of the Murray home.

Patrolman Bowden of the West 100th Street Station arrested a man who said he was Lawrence Ellert, 40 years, for soliciting alms. According to the patrolman, the prisoner approached a number of little girls near Public School 166, 111 Eighty-ninth Street, near Columbus Avenue. Magistrate Corrigan sentenced him to six months in the workhouse.

Harry Newman, 16 years, a peddler, living at 419 East Fifty-sixth Street, arrested Thursday afternoon, charged with an attack upon Beatrice Hunter 6 years old, 123 East Fiftieth Street, was held in $2,500 bail until Tuesday, when he was arraigned in the Yorkville Court.

PUBLIC SERVICE BOARD WINS

Court Upholds Its Right to Supervise Refunding Bonds.

The Appellate Division upheld yesterday the right of the Public Service Commission to supervise the issue of bonds as a refunding measure. The case came before the court on a writ of certiorari obtained by the Dry Dock, East Broadway & Battery Railroad Company, a subsidiary of the Third Avenue Railway Company.

The company applied for permission to issue $2,800,000 bonds, but Commissioners Eustis, Maltbie, and Cram maintained that the issue would make the total bond issue greater than the value of the property and that the company would be unable to pay interest upon it. Chairman McCall and Commissioner Williams, however, were in favor of authorizing the issue on the ground that, if the company were not immediately able to meet the interest, it would be by the time the first payments fell due.

The question divided the Appellate Division as it had the commission, Justices Dowling, Clark, and Hotchkiss favoring the Public Service Commission and Justices Scott and Ingraham the company. The prevailing opinion held that the commission had the right to supervise a reorganization by the consideration of three points: First, whether the issue was necessary for refunding purposes; second, whether the expenditure to be refunded was a capital charge as distinct from an operating charge; third, whether, if an operating charge, the issue might not be permitted under the exception clause of the statute.

So the writ of certiorari was dismissed with costs.

SPAIN ASKED HUERTA TO QUIT, BLANCO SAYS

THEN NOTE FROM MINISTER

The Mexican Bureau of Information, in the new Equitable Building, gave out yesterday a statement which said that Pedro Gonzales Blanco, who was described as a distinguished Spanish writer and who is now in New York, was authority for the statement that General Victoriano Huerta, the former Mexican President who is now in New York, had left Spain following a communication he received from the Spanish Minister of the Interior that his (Huerta's) presence was not desired longer in the country. Abraham Z. Ratner, who is General Huerta's personal representative, when told last night of the statement, said it was untrue and that General Huerta's departure from Spain was not requested or hastened by any action of the Spanish Government.

The statement of the Mexican Bureau of Information reads:

"An entirely new version for the cause and reason of General Victoriano Huerta's sudden appearance in New York has been given by Señor Pedro Gonzales Blanco, a Spanish author now on a visit in this city. It was not Huerta's desire to see new sights that brought him here, nor was it his great love for the United States and its people, but something much more serious and, perhaps, embarrassing.

"According to Señor Blanco, who was in Madird at the time when Huerta sought shelter there after he fled from Mexico City, it was at the demands of certain high Spanish officials that Huerta was compelled to leave Madrid and move to Barcelona, and finally leave Spain.

"As soon as Huerta came to Madrid,' said Señor Blanco, 'Señor Rodrigo Soriano, a Deputy in the House of Congress, protested in the name of the people against Huerta residing in Spain. He accused him of having murdered defenseless Spaniards, women, and children. Huerta replied to the attack, claiming that the charges were without foundation. Señor Soriano replied with a long list of names and dates, showing that the accusation was just. This was followed by a demonstration of workingmen, who protested against Huerta. The police were called to suppress them.

"'Following this episode, Sanchez Guerra, Minister of the Interior, wrote to Huerta, giving him to understand, in very polite terms, that his presence in Spain was not wanted. That caused Huerta to leave Spain and come here. It was not his love of the United States that brought him here, but the hope that here he would be able to live in peace.'

"Señor Blanco expressed the opinion and belief that Spain would be the first Government to recognize the Carranza administration. He said that Spain is beginning to realize that Carranza is the most constructive man Mexico has had. In Europe all the powers are waiting for the next step to be taken by Spain in its attitude toward Mexico. Spain has suffered and was the cause of more suffering than any other nation. Therefore, if Spain recognizes Carranza Europe is certain to follow.

"Spain's friendship for the Carranza Government was demonstrated, Señor Blanco said, when it refused to sell to Felix Diaz 25,000 Mauser rifles for the purpose of starting a counter revolt against Carranza. Diaz offered to pay very high prices, but the Spanish Government would not listen to him.

"Señor Blanco is stopping at the McAlpin Hotel. He is on his way to Madrid. He is the translator of the works of Walt Whitman, Friedrich Nietzsche, and Max Stirner. He has written a number of philosophical works himself and is prominent as a writer and philosopher."

DUCKED THE SOPHOMORES.

New York University Freshmen Turned Tables on Tormenters.

New York University sophomores of the College of Arts and the School of Applied Science at University Heights received a shock yesterday after they had ducked in the fountain all those first-year men who had not been ducked last Fall by '18's men. The freshmen at the conclusion of the affair took the law into their own hands yesterday and thoroughly ducked nearly a dozen second-year men.

Then the freshmen surrounded Leslie McCrea, editor of next year's Violet, the annual junior year book, and though McCrea weighs in the neighborhood of 200 pounds, they dragged him back to the fountain, which is just at the bottom of an embankment and at the end of the campus. Here the sophomores advanced in force; but too late. With seven freshmen holding him, the sophomore and future editor was pushed down the steep embankment and into the water.

John Quigley, the campus policeman, known to every student as "John," interposed 220 pounds of Irish brawn on the side of peace and finally managed to separate the classmen.

Olson Body Held for Autopsy.

An order from the District Attorney's office yesterday stopped the shipment to Chicago of the body of Harold G. Olson of 413 West 146th Street, designer and cutter of ladies' garments, which was found Thursday in the North River off 177th Street with a 40-pound stone tied about the neck. The body will be kept at the city mortuary until Dr. Otto Schultze, Medical Examiner of the District Attorney's staff, has made an autopsy to determine whether it is a case of murder or suicide.

POLICE KEEP PHONE JOBS.

As a result of the disinclination of Police Commissioner Woods to entrust the secrets that are transmitted over the telephone wires running into Police Headquarters to outsiders, the Board of Estimate agreed yesterday to drop the plan to have civilian telephone operators.

At the present time the switchboard is manned by thirty-six patrolmen, who are not only expensive, but are needed on the street, and it was thought that when the budget for 1915 was prepared that the efficiency of the force would be improved and a saving made by the appointment in their place of civilian operators at $65 a month. The objection of Commissioner Woods was that if a civilian betrayed an official secret there was no way of disciplining him.

BEGS THE POLICE TO FREE HIS BRIDE

PARENT LOCKS HER IN

After Ordering Son-in-Law from His House — Bridegroom Told to Go to Court.

Into the West Forty-seventh Street police station at 7:30 o'clock last night walked a young and very indignant young man. His eyes flashed and his fists opened and shut as he strode across the room to the desk where sat Lieut. Frye.

"I want some policemen," he told the Lieutenant, "and I want them quick."

"What for?" asked Frye.

"To help me rescue my wife," explained the young man.

Then he calmed down long enough to add that he was Berton French, 22 years old, and lived at 314 East Forty-second Street.

"We were married this very afternoon," he went on, reaching into his pocket and producing a document for Frye to read. It was a marriage certificate shewing that French and Miss Mabel Wood, 19 years old, of 450 West Forty-fifth Street, had yesterday been duly married by the Rev. William Montgomery at Second Avenue and Fiftieth Street.

French's voice shook as he unfolded the story of his matrimonial troubles to Frye. He had begun courting Miss Wood eight months ago, he said, and it was not long before it was mutually agreed that life would not be worth living unless she became Mrs. French. All of which seemed perfectly simple until Miss Wood's parents were consulted. They objected.

Thereafter French and Miss Wood carried on their courtship under difficulties. The young man tried to establish himself in the estimation of her parents, but without success. So they decided that the only way out was to take matters into their own hands, get a license, and be married, and then rely upon the traditional willingness of parents to forgive. Yesterday afternoon they met, and after getting the license at the Municipal Building, journeyed uptown and had the ceremony performed by the Rev. Mr. Montgomery. Then they hurried straight to the bride's home to receive the parental blessing.

The bride's father met them at the door. When he heard what had happened the flew into a rage.

"Get out of my house and never come back," French was told, and the next instant he found himself on the sidewalk—alone. Just how he got there he doesn't exactly recall, but the door was locked when he returned to the house so he determined to seek the aid of the police.

Lieutenant Frye expressed sympathy, but said he really couldn't turn out the reserves in such cases. He advised French to go to a Magistrate and get a summons. The young man seemed disappointed, but left the station promising to do so.

RAILROAD DENIES CHARGES.

Pennsylvania Superintendent Contradicts Testimony of Altoona Mayor

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Positive denial was made by G. W. Creighton, General Superintendent of the Pennsylvania Railroad, before the Industrial Relations Commission today that he had urged ex-Mayor Hoyer to make arrests in the Altoona strike in order to incite a riot. Today's session of the commission was devoted entirely to the situation between labor and the Pennsylvania Railroad.

The statement, made yesterday by the former Mayor of Altoona, that Mr. Redding, Superintendent of Motive Power, had told him that the Pennsylvania Railroad had fixed the Judge and District Attorney so that no action would be taken against a railroad policeman who had nearly killed a labor organizer was denied by the witness. He said that he had talked with Mr. Redding over the telephone last night and that the former had positively denied having said anything of the kind.

"Do you think the Mayor would accuse an officer of your company that way if nothing of the kind happened?" asked Chairman Walsh.

"Mr. Redding told me that the charge was unqualifiedly false," said Creighton.

Chairman Walsh then asked Creighton to get an affidavit from Redding.

In testifying about conditions in Altoona Mr. Creighton said:

"Altoona is dominated by the Pennsylvania in a certain way, because the people are all affiliated with the company and would be with us if left to their own devices."

Mrs. J. Borden Harriman asked Mr. Creighton if the Pennsylvania officials tried to confer with the labor organizers at Altoona.

"Certainly not," said Creighton. "They were intruders who came to Altoona to stir up trouble because of failure to win a strike on the Western Division. We did not deem it our duty to consult with men of this character, whose business in our community was to disturb our peace."

"Did you ever try to convince the labor leaders that they were in the wrong?" Mrs. Harriman asked. "How did you know they would not reason with you if you never talked with them?"

"There was absolutely no reason to talk with them."

Commissioner Lennon asked what the Pennsylvania would do if he should go to Altoona to organize workmen. Creighton replied:

"We would do all we could to prevent organization of unions to affiliate with the American Federation of Labor or any organization which would subject us to sympathetic strikes or the closed shop."

SUFFRAGETTES RAISE SIEGE.

Women Leave Washington After Futile Attempt to See President.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The Congressional Union for Woman Suffrage announced this evening that "the suffragist siege of the White House was lifted today," and that the besieging force, consisting of Mrs. Lawrence Lewis, Jr., and Mrs. Harry Lowenburg of Philadelphia, had returned to that city after another futile attempt to see President Wilson and get him to consent to receive a deputation when he visits that city next Monday. The siege was begun Wednesday, continued all day yesterday, and was resumed this morning.

Joseph F. Tumulty, the secretary to the President, told the two women today that the President could not see them today on account of the pressure of more important matters, and that his time would be so taken up in Philadelphia on Monday that it would be impossible for him to make an appointment for them there.

Mr. Tumulty's positive stand convinced Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Lowenburg that it was useless to continue the siege. Secretary Bryan was approached by them when he was leaving the White House and asked to intercede with the President in their behalf, but he said that he could not help them.

NEWARK INVITES SUNDAY

But Wealthiest Churches Are Against Proposed Revival.

By a vote of 52 to 8 the Ministerial Association of Newark, N. J., yesterday decided to invite the Rev. Billy Sunday to take charge of a campaign in that city when he had finished with Paterson.

The eight ministers who voted "no" represented the largest and wealthiest congregations in the city. They were the Rev. George P. Dougherty of St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church, the Rev. Dr. William J. Dawson of the First Presbyterian, the Rev. Otis M. Trousdale of the First Reformed, the Rev. Charles H. Stewart of the North Reformed, the Rev. Mercer G. Johnstone of Trinity Episcopal, the Rev. John J. Moment of the High Street Presbyterian, the Rev. Charles B. Condit of Trinity Reformed, and the Rev. Albert Farr of St. John's Episcopal.

Only two of the ten Episcopal churches in Newark were represented, and it was made plain that if Sunday did visit Newark the Episcopalians would neither close their churches or have anything whatever to do with his campaign.

CHARLTON EXPERTS DIFFER.

Court Alienist Decides Prisoner Was Only Party Irresponsible.

ROME, May 7, (via Paris.)—"I shall remember the time I have spent here as the happiest in my life," was the assertion made by Porter Charlton in reply to a question as to whether he was being well treated at the asylum where he is in custody awaiting trial on the charge of murdering his wife. He has prepared a long statement in his own defense, written in Italian.

Charlton's examination by expert alienists has been virtually completed. Dr. Valtorta, retained by the defense, has come to the conclusion that because of nervous excitement Charlton was entirely irresponsible when he killed his wife. Dr. Falciola, appointed by the court, has decided, on the contrary, that he was only partly irresponsible. In view of this difference of opinion a third expert, probably Professor Maggiotto, director of the asylum in which Charlton is confined, will be appointed.

He probably will require two months more for his examination, in which case the trial will not begin before December.

JAPANESE TEA MEN STUDYING AMERICA

WE BUY 40,000,000 POUNDS

Eight Japanese financiers and producers and exporters of tea registered at the Hotel Imperial yesterday under the guidance of Iwao Nishi, Chief Tea Commissioner for Japan to the Panama-Pacific Exposition. Most of them come from Shidzuoka, which is the great centre of the tea-growing and manufacturing industry, and, with the exception of Mr. Nishi, this is the first time that any of them has ever seen New York.

Mr. Nishi, who comes from Tokio, is a representative of the Japanese Central Tea Association. Sentaro Ito is a special commissioner for that association. R. Amama is a representative of the Shidzuoka Tea Guild. K. Saka is Tea Commissioner representing Shidzuoka. K. Tamana is President of the Shidkuoka Gas Company. S. Mitsuhaski is the proprietor of the Tea Machinery Manufacturing Company of Shidzuoka and the inventor of many devices for preparing tea for the market. Kumajiro Sano is one of the largest paper napkin manufacturers in Japan and a member of the Prefectural Assembly of Shidzuoka. J. Oishi is the proprietor of the biggest hardware store in that city.

"Some of us are exhibitors at the Panama-Pacific Exposition, and all are official delegates to the exposition," said Mr. Nishi. "The members of the party thought they would like to see something of the Eastern cities of the United States, and I agreed to act as leader of the expedition. We stopped in St. Louis on the way here, and after about a week in New York we are going to Boston, Montreal, Toronto, Buffalo, Chicago, and Seattle.

"The connection between Shidzuoka and New York is very close in a business way. Most of the members of the party have correspondents here. Of all the tea exported from Japan the most comes to the United States, and much of the rest to Canada. Japan produces from 80,000,000 to 90,000,000 pounds of tea. Of this 40,000,000 pounds come to the United States and 5,000,000 to Canada. So you see that the United States is our biggest customer.

"We could send you more. In Japan about 250,000 acres of land is devoted to tea growing. We pick as much as we have a demand for from this country. It takes only about an hour by our modern methods to prepare the tea for market, and very little longer to refire it so that it will keep well during exportation. Of course, in the past we have turned out green tea for the most part. Lately we have begun experiments at making black tea, and have begun to turn it out in commercial quantities.

"As everywhere else, the war hit business generally in Japan very hard, but of late there has been considerable improvement in the general situation. The tea business, however, has not been hurt at all by the war. On the contrary, it has benefited considerably. One reason is that the United States has kept out of the trouble. Fo another thing, India and Ceylon have not been able to export as much tea as usual. The demand for Japanese tea in the United States has grown for this reason, and the outlook is for continued increase. There are almost 3,000,000 people employed in the tea industry in Japan.

"I am not of the opinion that there will be war between Japan and China," said Mr. Nishi. "It is evident that Yuan Shih-kai, the President of China, is holding off until the last moment in the fear that if he agrees too readily to the Japanese demands he may have a revolution on his hands. I am sure there is no intention on the part of Japan to violate Chinese integrity. As a matter of fact, it is our intention to maintain it.

"As for the Panama-Pacific Exposition, so far it has been satisfactory. In fact, in point of beauty and arrangement it is the finest international fair I have ever seen. However, people have not been coming to see it in the numbers that were expected, but it is hoped that this month and next will show a satisfactory attendance. Our Japanese exhibit has been very much admired. We hope to look over the gas works and some of the big industrial plants while we are in New York."

DR. PARKHURST IN TRADE.

Said to Have Lent His Name to Build Up a Candy Concern.

Vice Chancellor Howell in the Chancery Court in Newark yesterday granted a rule to show cause why the sale of the Franklin's Incorporated, a candy manufacturing corporation of New Jersey, should not be set aside and why a receiver should not be appointed to take charge of the business until "a new and fair election" of Directors can be had.

In the bill of complaint the Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, one of the Directors of the concern, is alleged to have "loaned the use of his name" to carry out the scheme to dissolve the Franklin corporation and to organize in its stead the American Candy Manufacturing Company, as a corporation of Delaware.

The court order was obtained by Charles Jones, of the Newark law firm of Jones & Gleason, as counsel for thirty-four or protesting stockholders.

The bill of complaint says Dr. Parkhurst "agreed to loan the use of his name under the promise by N. A. Brown and others that when the company was incorporated under the new name, the said N. A. Brown would dispose of his (Parkhurst's) stock and thus relieve him of his investment."

It is also charged that Dr. Parkhurst sent out letters soliciting stockholders' proxies, representing that he was "in a position to look after your (stockholders') interest in a thorough, careful, conscientious way."

WITNESSES ACCUSE POLICE.

Chief and Sergeant to Explain Interest in Alienation Suit.

Special to The New York Times.

ELIZABETH, N. J., May 7.—Charged with interfering with the administration of justice, Chief of Police Patrick S. Kiely and Sergeant Morris Higgins of the Plainfield Police Department were summoned today to appear before Judge William H. Speer in Circuit Court next Friday and show cause why they should not be held in contempt of court. They are accused of intimidating witnesses in the $25,000 alienation suit brought by Mrs. Florence E. Roundey of Plainfield against Mrs. Mine Poineer. Mrs. Roundey also has begun divorce proceedings against her husband, John Roundey.

George Faturos, a fruit dealer, whose store is directly opposite Roundey's place of business, and six young women employed by Roundey are the witnesses in the case. According to affidavits made by Faturos and the six women, Chief Kiely told them they would be sent to jail if they testified at the trial. He also told them, it is alleged, that their fines for failing to appear as witnesses would be made up to them.

TIDE GOVERNS GUN TESTS.

Bethlehem Steel Company Fixes Hours to Suit Fishermen.

CAPE MAY, N. J., May 7.—When the Bethlehem Steel Company obtained contracts from foreign Governments for war materials it came to Cape May and made extensive purchases of land along the shore of Delaware Bay for a proving ground where guns and ammunition could be tested. The firing at times has been so vigorous as to give rise to rumors that a battle was being fought on the Atlantic Ocean, which is only a few miles away.

Farmers and fishermen in the vicinity became aroused because the firing was often done without notice. They protested to the steel company and the authorities, with the result that at a meeting last night representatives of the company entered into an agreement whereby proper notice was to be given to fishermen and pleasure boats in Delaware Bay. The shooting hereafter will be done only two hours before and two hours after high tide.

LEPER ESCAPES FROM JAIL.

Supposed to be Now in Chicago or Some Near-by City.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 7.—Angelo Lunardi, the leper, who for the last three months has furnished a problem to the Federal, State, and local authorities of Highland Park, escaped from the jail there last night. This information was wired today to the State Board of Health, which immediately notified the authorities of Chicago and neighboring cities to make every effort to apprehend the man.

Lunardi was brought to this country on a North German Lloyd steamship from Italy. The Federal authorities ordered him deported, but because the steamship company had practically been put out of business by the European war, it could not comply with the order. Last week steps were taken to have him placed in a State institution for treatment.

JUSTICE A SUICIDE IN JAIL.

Shoots Himself as Grand Jury Considers Embezzlement Charge.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWTON, N. J., May 7.—While several witnesses were waiting this morning to appear against him before the Grand Jury, Justice of the Peace Charles G. Olah of Franklin, a prisoner in the county jail on two charges of embezzling cash bail deposited with him, shot himself three times through the chest just above the heart. He died in fifteen minutes.

Olah was arrested on April 29 on a charge of having embezzled $70 deposited with him by a prisoner as cash security after he had been arrested for assault and battery. The money was never returned, and a record of the case was never sent to the County Court. Olah furnished $500 bail when arraigned on this charge. On Tuesday the Justice was arrested a second time, being charged with misappropriating $100 cash bail.

On Tuesday bail was increased to $1,000; which he was unable to furnish, and he was locked up.

FIREMEN OVERCOME BY SMOKE IN SHIP

Five Dragged Out Unconscious from a Hold Where Resin and Oil Blaze.

ONE SAVED BY PULMOTOR

Others Also Resuscitated—Fire in Canastota Put Out After $50,000 Damage Is Done.

When a fire started at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, in hold 5 of the United States-Australasia Steamship Company's vessel, the Canastota, an 8,000-ton steamship, tied up at Pier 37, Atlantic Basin, foot of Pioneer Street, Brooklyn, such heavy smoke poured from the hatch that the firemen could not enter, although they knew that 20,000 gallons of gasoline were stored in hold 3, only a short distance away from the blaze. Battalion Chief Harrigan, who responded to the alarm sent in by Captain Doty, the ship's commander, learned that 30,000 more gallons of gasoline were stored on the pier to which the Canastota was tied, and he sent in a second alarm.

Captain Doty had already had two lighters on which were 50,000 more gallons of gasoline, towed away from his vessel and Deputy Chief O'Hara, who came on the second alarm, ordered holes bored through the deck so that the blaze could be reached.

The fireboats William J. Gaynor and Zophar Mills three lines aboard the Canastota and presently several streams were pouring into the hold. The fire had made such headway, however, that suffocating smoke continued to rise until 3:30 o'clock, when the firemen determined to enter the hold.

Ropes were tied under the arms of men of Truck 131 and Engine 203 and they went down into the smoke, while their comrades held the other ends of the lines. As long as a line moved the firemen on deck paid it out, but once it stopped they began hauling in, and thus more than a dozen firemen were pulled out half conscious. Five were brought up senseless. They were John J. Ryan, Daniel W. Mortimer, and Edward Reardon, of Truck 131, and Peter J. Killen and John Klein, of Engine 203. Killen was so filled with smoke that Dr. Bienfield of the Long Island College Hospital used a pulmotor on him. All were resuscitated, finally, and sent to their homes. In another hour the fire was under control. The damage was estimated at $50,000. What caused the fire is not known.

Hold 5 was loaded with resin, parafin, wax, and oils. With the gasoline these were consigned to firms in Sydney, Australia, and Wellington, New Zealand. The ship was to have sailed next Wednesday.

SEEKS $30,000 FOR BURNS.

Flawn Alleges Seven Pounds of Flesh Were Cut Off.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., May 7.—During the trial before Justice Morschauser and a jury in the Supreme Court today of the action of Arthur Flawn against the New York Central Railroad Company for $30,000 damages for being burned by electricity, testimony was given to show that seven pounds of flesh had to be cut off the plaintiff's left arm and side as a result of the burns.

Flawn testified that on July 17, 1914, he was employed as a lineman on the Harlem Division. A lightning storm had burned out one of the transformers on Pole 82, which furnishes the electricity for the signal wires just south of Woodlawn Station, and as the trains were being held up, Flawn was told to rush the work of replacing the transformer. He said he had to walk about a mile along the tracks, carrying about one hundred pounds on his back, consisting of block and falls, wrenches, wire, and other implements, and when he reached the pole he was in a perspiration. He climbed the pole and dered him deported, but because the steamship company had practically been put out of business by the European war, it could not comply with the order. Last week steps were taken to have him placed in a State institution for treatment. just as he reached the damaged transformer he slipped and his body came in contact with a wire carrying a current of 2,200 volts, which burned deeply into his flesh, and he was thrown to the ground. It is charged that the wire was not properly insulated, and that the current should have been turned off.

The company contends that Flawn met with the accident through his own negligence. A steel pole with the transformers and wires attached was mounted in the courtroom to illustrate how the accident happened.

KIDNAPPED GIRL FOUND.

Foster Parents Charge Her Mother with Abduction.

SALEM, N. J., May 7.—After an eight months' search, which was carried through several States, Bertha May Griver, 9 years old, who was kidnapped from the home of her adopted parents near Elmer, was found today at Camden. The child's mother, Nettie Garrison, alias Read, was held in $1,000 bail for a hearing next Friday in Salem.

The child was taken from the New Jersey Children's Home Society when a mere infant and legally adopted by Howard Griver, a farmer. On Oct. 22 last the child was on her way to school when, it was alleged, she was kidnapped by her mother.

The girl appeared to be glad to get back home. She said she had been carried through various parts of New Jersey, Pennsylvania, and Delaware.

WISH NO HUMILIATING PEACE

German and Austrian Socialists for Eventual Disarmament.

The attitude of the German and Austro-Hungarian Social Democrats with respect to the war is shown in a manifesto issued by them at a conference of the party representatives of the two countries held at Vienna on April 12 and 13. The statement, as published in Vorwärts and the Frankfurter Zeitung of April 21, reads:

"In spite of the long duration of the war the peoples in all countries are determined to defend their independence and integrity with all thir power. But the war—unprecedented in extent, violence, and duration—has everywhere brought upon humanity terrible misery, destroyed millions of lives, and annihilated immeasurable cultural resources that were the product of the labor of many generations.

"In a fateful manner the predictions of our most trusted experts in economics and history in all Socialist congresses have now been proved true; that the continued policy of world armament would lead to a world catastrophe.

"Naturally, the proletariat suffers most of all everywhere, especially under the economic results of the war. Therefore, in all lands, not only in belligerent, but aso lin neutral countries, the yearning must grow for an ending of the war and peace. Especially with the approach of the 1st of May there is revived the thought of the solidarity of all races. First of May there is revived the thought of the solidarity of all races, filling more than ever the hearts of the class-conscious workers of all lands.

"The Social Democratic parties, which have always, and in accordance with their constitution, worked for the fraternizing of the various races, are the chosen heralds of the yearning for peace. This, in the expression of the will and the power of self-assertion, not in any way of a feeling of weakness.

"But from this it necessarily follows that there must be only such a peace as humiliates no people, and that only such a peace can insure the permanent co-operation of all civilized peoples.

"The parties represented at this conference take thenr stand upon the platform of the resolution of the international Socialist congresses, particularly the Copenhagen Congress of 1910(and in that spirit deem the following assurances necessry upon conclusion of peace:

"The extension of international courts of arbitration to form obligatory institutions for the purpose of settling all disputes between the individual States. The submission of all State treaties and conventions to democratic control by popular representations. The international curtailment of armaments by treaty, with the goal of universal disarmament. The recognition of the right of all peoples to decide their own future.

"Furthermore, the representatives of the Social Democratic parties of Germany, Austria and Hungary, declares: The fact that the Social Democratic parties of the belligerent countries are defending their land and people, must be no o bstacle to the maintenance of the international relations of all Social Democratic parties with one another, nor to the continuation of the activities of their international institutions."

TO HEAR CITY ON TAX BILL.

McAneny Invited to Appear Before Governor Whitman.

Acting Mayor McAneny said yesterday that he had learned from notices in the evening newspapers that Governor Whitman had sent him an invitation to appear at the hearings, to begin next week, on the tax bill.

"I have not received the formal invitation," he said. "The city will be represented at all the hearings, and I shall go to Albany myself on some day that will be arranged. I presume that the Governor's invitation is in response to the letter Mayor Mitchel sent him just before he left for the West, in which he asked that the city might have a hearing."

JERSEY MAN 111 YEARS OLD.

TRENTON, N. J., May 7.—Moses Robinson of 551 South Clinton Street claims to be the oldest male resident of this State. This evening he celebrated the 111th anniversary of his birth, and he says he expects to live several years. His sight is fairly good, does not have to use glasses to read, and says his general health is good.

He was born at Dressa, Russia, on May 7, 1804, and spent his life, until about fourteen years ago, on a farm there. He was then brought to this country with his wife by their children. His wife, who died four years ago, was 102 years of age, and for fifty-two years before her death she had been blind.

BISHOP OPPOSES BILL.

Albany Prelate Argues Against Charity Accounting Measure.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 7.—Bishop Richard H. Nelson of the Protestant Episcopal Diocese of Albany appeared today before Governor Whitman in opposition to the Thompson bill requiring the filing in January of each year with the Secretary of State an annual report of the total receipts and detailed disbursements of charitable organizations. Julian Gerard of New York spoke in favor of the bill.

Senator Thompson some time ago gave as a reason for the measure that he wanted to discover from what source the money came to pay certain lobbyists who appeared before the Legislature every year. At the hearing today he said that while some of these organizations paid only 4 per cent. for administration, one society paid 65 per cent. of its receipts. Bishop Nelson said that the work required of him under the proposed law would increase his burden tremendously.

Mr. Gerard said it was the elaborate bookkeeping systems employed by many organizations that ate so deeply into the receipts. He contended that the people who gave to charitable organizations should be informed how their money was expended.

German Point of View.

King of the Vandals.

It is recalled as an historic fact, of some interest just now, that when Frederick, elector of Brandenburg, assumed the title of King in 1701, he hesitated some time between choosing the title of King of Prussia or that of King of the Vandals.—Post Intelligence, Seattle.

CITY TO WELCOME THE FLEET TODAY

Sixteen Great Fighting Ships Will Anchor in the Hudson This Morning.

SUBMARINES ARE ALL HERE

Two Divisions of Under-Water Craft Arrive After an Unbroken Voyage of 1,200 Miles.

Today's Official Program.

9 A. M.—Fleet arrives and anchors between 82d and 155th Sts.

11 A. M.—Mayor calls on the Admiral in command of the fleet.

2 P. M.—Admiral lands at West 79th St. and is escorted by platoon of mounted police to the City Hall, to return the call of the Mayor.

8 P. M.—Fleet illuminates until 11 P. M.

The Atlantic Fleet, with the fleet flagship Wyoming leading the way, sailed from Hampton Roads shortly before noon yesterday. By 9 o'clock this morning the 16 superdreadnoughts, dreadnoughts, and predreadnoughts that will figure in the Presidential review of May 17, and again on the 18th, will, if everything goes well, be swinging at anchor in the Hudson, forming a great column of fighting ships that will stretch north from a point about opposite Eighty-second Street nearly to Fort Washington Point.

Final arrangements for the official welcoming of Admiral Fletcher, the Commander in Chief of the fleet, and the officers and men under his command were completed yesterday afternoon. At 11 o'clock this morning Acting Mayor McAneny, accompanied by the Mayor's secretary, Theodore Rousseau, will proceed to the Wyoming, where Admiral Fletcher and his staff will be waiting. After a brief exchange of courtesies, the Acting Mayor will return to the City Hall. No salute will be fired as the Mayor goes aboard the flagship, but the band will play as he goes on board and again as he leaves.

At 2 o'clock this afternoon Admiral Fletcher, accompanied by Captain H. McL. P. Huse, his Chief of Staff; Lieut. Commander T. A. Kearney, Lieut. Commander John Halligan, Medical Inspector L. W. Spratling, Pay Inspector J. J. Cheatham, Lieut. Col. B. H. Fuller of the marines, and Lieutenants W. R. Furlong, F. J. Fletcher, and Aubrey W. Fitch, will return the Mayor's visit. A platoon of mounted police will escort the Admiral and his staff from the naval landing, at Seventy-ninth Street, to the City Hall. At the City Hall the Acting Mayor will deliver a short speech, formally welcoming the Commander in Chief and his men to New York.

While the fleet commander and the Acting Mayor are exchanging visits, the bluejackets on the ships will be busy stringing electric lights about the ships for tonight's illumination. The ships will all be outlined in electricity, every turret, funnel, mast, and hull standing out sharply, the result being a spectacle that, for beauty, can hardly be surpassed. The lights will be turned on shortly after dark and will be turned off at 11 P. M. Tomorrow night the illumination will be repeated during the same hours.

The Illuminated Column.

Here is the list of the illuminated ships, with their anchorages, the number of masts, funnels, and main turrets, the parts of the ship that will be electrically outlined:

Submarine Flotilla Complete.

The submarine flotilla, under command of Commander Yates Stirling, Jr., is now in the river, the flotilla having been completed with the arrival of the boats of the G and K classes Commander Stirling has the auxiliary cruiser Prairie, one of the ships that figured prominently in the taking of Vera Cruz last year, as his flagship. The K and some D and E boats came from Pensacola, Fla., under their own power, one of the longest continuous voyages ever made by vessels of the submersible type.

They made the 1,200-mile run from Key West, their last stopping place after leaving Pensacola, to New York without a stop. What these submarines have done is considered interesting in connection with the long-distance opurations of German submarines around the Scilly Islands and off the Irish coast.

The second division consists of the submarines D-1, D-2, D-3, E-1 and E-2, and the Fourth Division of the K-1, K-2, K-5 and K-6. At Pensacola, both flotillas, with their tenders, were engaged for the last four months in drills and exercises in co-operation with a mining division and the aeronautical corps stationed at the same place. This is the first occasion that these three elements of the naval service held joint manoeuvres.

Last Fall when the second division, comprising the D and E boats, was undergoing its routine annual overhaul at the Norfolk Navy Yard they were criticised as being in unseaworthy condition. Upon the completion of this periodical overhaul, which is given all vessels of the navy, they were assigned to continue their drills and exercises, and their achievement in making a steady run from Key West to New York was accomplished on the termination of these manoeuvres.

Baseball and Boxing for Sailors.

Finley J. Shepard, Chairman of the Sailors' Entertainment Committee, announced yesterday that R. B. Ward, the President of the Brooklyn Club of the Federal League, will give 3,000 tickets for the game this afternoon between Kansas City and Brooklyn at Washington Park, and 3,000 each for Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday and Thursday of next week. On Monday afternoon the American League will give 10,000 seats at the Polo Grounds for the game between New York and Boston.

The complete program for the sparring matches for the enlisted men at Madison Square Garden next Thursday night was announced yesterday as follows:

Battling Levinsky vs. Jim Coffey.
Benny Leonard vs. Jock Britton.
Young Weinert vs. Young Ahearn.
K. O. Brown vs. Marty Cross.
Sammy Robbeau vs. Kid Graves.
Sam McVea vs. Joe Jeannette.

During the time that the fleet is in the river the Fifth Avenue Coach Company will run a special observation service up and down Riverside Drive. Buses will be run at short intervals on the Drive, starting at Seventy-second Street Subway station and running to 135th Street. In addition, the company will operate a special service from First Avenue and Seventy-second Street, west to Riverside Drive and then to 135th Street. Both services will start about 7 o'clock in the evening and continue until after midnight.

The members of the Hotel Committee, of which Walton H. Marshall is Secretary, announced yesterday that the hotels represented on this committee, including the Astor, Belmont, Knickerbocker, Manhattan, Plaza, Ritz-Carlton, St. Regis, Waldorf, Vanderbilt, Woodward, and Biltmore, will all maintain naval headquarters during the stay of the fleet, a notice of which will be sent to every officer of the fleet today. In addition each hotel will be appropriately decorated.

SUBMARINE EVADES MINES.

Successful American Experiment with Submerged Vessel.

In the aeroplane experiments the division under Lieut. Commander Henry C. Mustin, chief of the aeronautic station at Pensacola, with Lieutenants Kenneth Whiting and P. N. L. Bellinger and Ensigns Richard C. Saufley and Godfred De C. Chevalier, tests were made with aeroplanes to discover, if possible, the presence of submarines. After the periscope was entirely submerged it was impossible for those in the aeroplanes to discover them. Days were taken for these tests in Pensacola when the weather was not favorable to either the flyers or the submarines. In some of these tests Commander Sterling and Lieutenant Morrison accompanied the naval flyers.

A submarine ran through mine fields with buoys placed representing mines set in Z shape. The submarine K-6, Lieutenant Joseph O. Fisher, U. S. N., commanding, submerged at a depth of 60 feet for a ruh of 1,000 feet, passed through the mine field without accident, proving the submarine can be operated successfully against mines in seeking the warship or harbor supposedly protected by them.

Submarines were submerged carrying their wireless standing on the outer deck. With this arrangement submarines can keep in communication below the sea. Heretofore the wireless apparatus was unshipped before submerging.

Telephone Messages To the Warships

WHILE the Fleet is in the North River, this company will maintain public telephone stations, in charge of attendants, at various official landings along the water-front.

Telephone messages for those aboard any of the ships may be sent from any telephone to these stations. The attendant will write the message down, place it in an envelope, and the Naval authorities will deliver it by the next boat leaving the landing for the ship you desire to reach.

Stations will be open from 8:00 A. M. until midnight.

Just ask "Information" for the telephone number of the station nearest the ship you wish to reach, or call at any of our Commercial Offices and secure a list of the warships with the telephone numbers of the stations.

DISGUISED SUITOR SHOOTS TWO WOMEN

Poses as Health Officer to Enter House from Which He Had Been Barred.

ACTRESS GAVE COSTUME

Grace Hawthorne, Arrested as Accomplice of Jersey Barber, Denies She Knew He Was Armed.

Disguised in wig and false whiskers and posing as an officer of the Health Department, Louis Felice, a barber of 77 Ocean Avenue, Jersey City, obtained entrance yesterday morning to the home of Miss Margaret Cassidy at 749 Boulevard, Bayonne, shot Miss Cassidy and her sister, Mrs. Marion McGee. Neither was seriously injured, and their assailant was overpowered and turned over to the police. Felice was accompanied by a woman who gave her name as Mrs. Priscilla Sargeant, but afterward she said she was Grace Hawthorne, an actress, who in her day won a measure of fame on the stage.

The barber, the police say, met Miss Cassidy, who is 20 years old, several months ago. He fell in love, and three weeks ago asked her to marry him. She refused, and Felice threatened to "get even." When Felice met the actress at Forty-second Street and Broadway last Tuesday the plan for shooting Miss Cassidy took shape. Mrs. Sargeant says he told her that he was a member of the Felice family, several members of which had been on the stage. She says she took him to her home at 235 West Forty-sixth Street. The barber said a women owed him money, but he was never able to see her at her home. He was sure she was at home, and if he was provided with some sort of a disguise he could reach her and demand his money, he said.

Miss Hawthorne consented to furnish the disguise. She obtained for him a blue uniform, a pair of smoked glasses, and a cap. The beard and wig she fashioned out of material she had at hand. After a rehearsal in Miss Hawthorne's home she and Felice early yesterday morning went to the Cassidy home in Bayonne.

"Do you know who I am?" Felice asked Miss Cassidy when she opened the door.

Mrs. McGee, who had penetrated the disguise, called out to her sister to look out. Felice pulled off his wig and whiskers. "Yes, it's me," he said. The girl started to run, but Felice drew a revolver and fired. The bullet struck her in the neck and she fell to the floor. Mrs. McGee, who had her 3-months-old son Woodrow Wilson McGee in her arms, started screaming from the room. Felice fired two shots at her, one striking her in the thigh. She sank to the floor and the child fell from her arms. Felice and his companion ran down the stairs to the street.

Dennis McGee, Mrs. McGee's husband, who had been asleep in another room, caught the pair about a block from the house and held them until Police Lieutenant Whalen arrived.

Miss Cassidy and her sister were taken to the Bayonne Hospital. Neither was seriously hurt. Felice was charged with atrocious assault and attempt to kill. The actress, who was held as his accomplice, says she did not know Felice was armed.

The name Grace Hawthorne was familiar to those who followed the stage thirty years ago. She was once the talk of London. She made her début in Providence in 1876, and after three months in small parts the illness of a leading woman gave her an opportunity and she emerged from unimportant parts to play Zoe in "The Octoroon," May in "Ticket of Leave," and other leading rôles. At one time she owned the lease of two theatres. With her husband, Bernard Sargeant de Santleys, a relative of the late Duc de Chaulnes, she came to New York in 1907.

The St. Louis Library gave $72 for the first Dutch edition of Hennepin's "Description of the Coasts of North America." Dr. Martini obtained the "Nouveaux Voyages" of N. To Try Roosevelt Cases in Mercer.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, May 7.—In an opinion by Justice Swayne the Supreme Court today allowed the drawing of a Mercer County jury to try the men indicted in Middlesex County in connection with the recent strike killings at Roosevelt. The Court held that the public mind in Middlesex was inflamed, and that a fair and impartial trial could not be had in that county.

LOW WAGES CAUSE CRIME.

Justice Russell Tells Women What Induces First False Step.

Special to The New York Times.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., May 7.—Chief Justice Franklin Russell of the Court of Special Sessions, New York, told the New Jersey State Federation of Women's Clubs, in convention here today, that the way to lessen crime was for employers to increase wages. Most criminals, he said, were mental defectives, and it had been his experience that the first false step was generally taken because of low wages and a desire to dress well and maintain a higher level than they could afford.

Juvenile crime, he contended, should be punished from the viewpoint of mental defection as it was a matter for pathologists and sociologists to deal with rather than the courts. In his opinion when employers realized the justice of raising wages there would be a marked falling off in the number of juvenile and other forms of crime.

Jonahan Day, head of the New York Labor Temple, seconded what Justice Russell said.

"You may conclude that I entertain socialistic views when I say that the need of today to contribute toward bringing the millennium to the labor world is that the captains of industry should share their profits with the employes who produce their wealth. Social justice would ask that this favor should be granted to the laborer."

A suffrage resolution will be introduced tomorrow, and the antis in the federation are making vigorous efforts to defeat it. They contend that the women's clubs should maintain strict neutrality on the issue.

SOUGHT TO AID THE NEEDY.

Hotel Clerk Thought at First Two Bankers Were Hungry.

Two elderly men approached the information desk at the McAlpin night before last, and stood by patiently until the last person who wanted to know where the lights of Broadway were brightest had gone. Then one of them nodded mysteriously to Leonard Dashiell, the clerk in charge, and leaned over the desk.

"Can you tell me, Sir," he said, in a whisper, "where is the nearest breadline?"

Dashiell looked at him in astonishment, for the two were well-dressed, and seemingly well-fed.

"A breadline?" he repeated, fumbling in his pocket. "Well, the Knickerbocker used to have one, but that has been discontinued. The nearest is some distance from here," and he told them how to get there. Then he drew a dime from his pocket and laid it on the counter. "You will need carfare," he suggested.

"Oh, that's all right, young man," said the other hastily. "Thank you just the same, but my brother and I happen to be bankers. We should have told you that we just wanted to see if there were any poor souls in need near by, so that we could go there and aid them."

And repeating their thanks, they walked away.

TO GUARD ICE CREAM SODA.

National Commission Aims to Standardize All Milk Products.

If members of the National Commission on Milk Standards who met at the Biltmore yesterday have their way, a time will come when persons who ask for ice-cream soda will know what they are getting. The commission wants ice cream labeled as such, and if it is something else they want that made known in some way. Butter and condensed milk, its members believe, should also be standardized and labeled and some means adopted of detecting substitutes.

The commission has, so far, had the co-operation of the New York City Department of Health in attending to the proper sanitary condition and grading of milk offered for sale, and it is said that ice cream, butter, and condensed milk have been neglected. Manufacturers and distributors of milk and milk products met with the commission yesterday.

Dr. M. J. Rosenau, head of the department of preventive medicine at Harvard, presided. Dr. Carl Alsberg, Chief of the Bureau of Chemistry in the Department of Agriculture, explained the commission's object.

The commission will go into executive session today.

MARBLEHEAD, Mass., May 7.—A hydro-aeroplane, built for Vincent Astor of New York, was wrecked during a trial flight here today. The aviator, Clifford L. Webster, sustained a fracture of the arm, but his companion, a mechanician named Carman, escaped unhurt.

The men were returning to the harbor from a trip over the ocean, and in an attempted volplane across the causeway connecting Marblehead Neck with the town the forward pontoon of the machine struck the sea wall. Both men were thrown from the machine, which was hurled across the roadway and fell on the rocks on the harbor side.

WAR BY ASSASSINATION.

From our Department of State there must go to the Imperial Government at Berlin a demand that the Germans shall no longer make war like savages drunk with blood, that they shall cease to seek the attainment of their ends by the assassination of non-combatants and neutrals. In the history of wars there is no single deed comparable in its inhumanity and its horror to the destruction, without warning, by German torpedoes of the great steamship Lusitania, with more than 1,800 souls on board, and among them more than 100 Americans. Our demand must be made, and it will be heeded, unless Germany in her madness would have it understood that she is at war with the whole civilized world. For many hours yesterday the hope was cherished that the passengers and crew of the ship had been saved, but later it was made certain that there had been an appalling loss of life, and then there was here full realization of the extreme seriousness of this latest act of barbarity and of its effect upon our relations to the war. It will stir the American people as they have not been stirred since the destruction of the Maine in the harbor of Havana, and Government and people will be united in the resolve that Germany must be called upon to bring her practices into conformity with the usages of civilized warfare.

Germany has wantonly and without provocation sent to their death a large, though as yet unknown, number of Americans. The American passengers aboard the Lusitania were going about their lawful concerns, they were entirely within their right, for no effective and lawfully established blockade annulled their privilege to take passage for England aboard a British ship. Had such a blockade been established, even, it would have been a monstrous crime for a German submarine to send the ship to the bottom without warning and without affording an opportunity to save the lives of the ship's company. The commander of the German submarine had a right to destroy the Lusitania, an enemy ship, since it is obvious that he could not with safety have attempted to take her as a prize to a German port, but it has always been the law of war at sea that the passengers and crew of a ship stopped or seized must be taken off before she is sunk. The loss of so great a number of the passengers and crew of the Lusitania shows that this humane rule was ruthlessly disregarded by the German Captain. It is an act, therefore, which falls clearly within the scope and intent of our solemn admonition to Germany.

It was on Feb. 10 that our Ambassador at Berlin was instructed to say to the German Government that "we could not assent to the policy embodied in its declaration of a war zone about the British Island and to request that Government "to consider before action is taken the critical situation in respect to the relations between this country and Germany which might arise were the German naval forces * * * to destroy any merchant vessel of the United States or cause the death of American citizens." We further warned Germany that it would be difficult for this Government to view such acts in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights, "which it would be very hard, indeed, to reconcile with the friendly relations now happily subsisting between the two Governments." Proceeding then to employ a diplomatic formula rarely necessary in intercourse between two friendly nations, we further admonished the Imperial Government that "we should be constrained to hold it to strict accountability for such acts of its naval authorities, "and to take any steps it might be necessary to take to safeguard American lives and property and to secure to American citizens the full enjoyment of their acknowledged rights on the high seas."

Germany has disregarded that warning. The series of acts which includes the attack upon the Cushing, the sinking of the Falaba, by which the life of an American passenger was lost, and the destruction of the American ship Gulflight flying the American flag, now reaches its culmination in the sending to their death by dastardly assassin methods of a large number of American passengers on the Lusitania. It is a matter of the gravest import for Germany that in this case there can be no disclaimer of responsibility.

The evidence of deliberation, of an intent to destroy this particular ship, is too nearly conclusive to be ignored. Upon the very day the Lusitania sailed the Imperial German Embassy at Washington caused to be published in the newspapers of this country an advertisement warning travelers that ships flying the flag of Great Britain were liable to destruction in the waters about the British Islands and that passengers "sailing in the war zone "on ships of Great Britain or her "allies do so at their own risk." There were other warnings. They were not heeded by the passengers who sailed on the Lusitania, simply because it was impossible for them to believe that a great civilized nation like Germany would wantonly destroy a merchant ship carrying only peaceable non-combatants. We have learned much about Germany since the war began, much that has shocked the world's sense of humanity, but this frightful deed was held to be within the domain of the incredible until it was perpetrated. It transcends in atrocity anything our Government could have apprehended at the time it issued its warning.

Now, as a necessary sequence of our note of Feb. 10 there must be a further communication to the German Government, and it must be something more than a protest. We must demand that Germany shall not continue to make war on us. We may present the demand with reasonable confidence that Germany will pay heed to it. She has done herself irreparable harm by her procedures in the war, beginning with the devastation of Belgium, and it is harm in this latest dreadful instance without any compensating gain. The Germans cannot advance their cause by forcing the world to perceive and admit that they are a people apart, that they are bent upon making war by methods and practices which civilized nations have long since renounced and condemned and by exhibiting a degree of brutality which is commonly associated with madness. It is not to be believed that either the German Government or the German people are wholly mad, and the notice we are compelled to take of the destruction of the Lusitania will, we hope, serve to recall them to sense and reason.

They cannot fail to understand the effect this deed will have upon public sentiment in the United States. While there may have been some among us who, up to this moment, were inclined to hold a suspended judgment as to the justifications and procedures of Germany, now the American people will be of one mind. We are proverbially a people not easily aroused to passion, there will now be little of that. The American people will feel that it is their duty to be calm, because the occasion is too serious for indulgence in vain excitement. And happily there is at the head of the nation a man of proved strength and balance. President WILSON, because of his strength and the habitual soberness of his judgment, will resist all promptings to unreasonable or hasty action. But he knows the people who have put him at the head of the nation, he will instinctively know and understand the feeling that pervades the country today, and he will respond to it by taking the firm, wise course which justice, right, and honor demand.

THE NAVAL DEMONSTRATION.

There can be no doubt that the assembling in the North River this morning, between Seventy-ninth and 170th Streets, of the entire Atlantic fleet, commanded by Admiral FLETCHER, will be viewed by the multitude with a deeper and more solemn feeling than any previous naval demonstration in New York has inspired. Commonly, when our warships assemble here, other nations participate in the ceremonies, and their battleships and armored cruisers share with ours the public admiration. All the navies of France, Great Britain, Russia, and Turkey are now employed in more serious business than a peaceful demonstration in foreign waters, while no other nation of Europe could have spared warships for this purpose now if any had been invited.

This assembling of the best part of our navy will have its social and festal side, it will be the occasion of ceremonial banquets and parades; if the program is carried out there will be much diversion for the officers and men of the fleet and the citizens as well. But in all the speech-making, in all the comment upon the ships and their armament, there will be an undercurrent of grave thought relating to the perils of the time, and, as the people view the naval pageant by day and by night from the river bank, they will be moved by a new sense of the significance of a great navy. No doubt the show as a show will be splendid and inspiring, but the demonstration means much more than that, whatever object may have been in mind when it was projected. There has been much talk about defects in our navy. It is the settled belief of many patriotic citizens who are not at all warlike in their tastes that we should have more ships and more men, that there is a scarcity of officers. We may be sure that the spectacle in the North River this week and next will convince everybody that the Atlantic fleet is a national possession which justifies national pride, that its great engines of war and its auxiliaries may be relied upon to defend us to the extent of their great strength in case of danger. Its presence here will prompt and justify a graver and more general consideration of the whole question of national defense.

CHINA'S HELPLESSNESS.

Now that Japan at the last moment has consented to withdraw Article V. of her demands upon China, a peaceable conclusion of "negotiations" that are unmatched in modern diplomacy becomes at once a probability. That was the article in which the Chinese Republic was asked to surrender sovereignty in its own affairs. It contained several stipulations, one of which, the most humiliating of all, provided that Japanese advisers should be received into the political, financial, and military councils of the Chinese. In withdrawing that article Japan was probably moved much more by signs of unfriendly opinion outside of Asia, especially in Great Britain and the United States, than by any threat on the part of the Chinese to offer physical resistance. That was hardly to be considered.

In numbers the Japanese are to the Chinese as one is to seven. In fighting strength they are so much superior that it would seem an act of sheer desperation for China to resist by force. Recent reports indicating that in the last extremity she might resort to arms rather than submit to the demands of the Tokio Government were received, indeed, by the world at large with real surprise. Everybody had taken it for granted that in the end, unsupported by any outside Power, she would confess herself helpless and accept Japan's terms.

The Chinese Army is a vague, inchoate thing. It had no plan of organization and actually no statistical existence until 1907, when an Imperial decree was issued calling for an army of thirty-six divisions of 10,000 men each, (360,000,) to be created by 1912, that is, in five years. There was to be compulsory service for ten years. But before 1912, and with only thirteen of the thirty-six divisions completed, the revolution took place, and the oldest monarchy in the world became a republic. Since the revolution there have been two rebellions. The military establishment has suffered from disaffections, lack of discipline, and inadequate revenues. Peking at one time and Nanking at another were looted by the troops. Repeatedly the army has preyed upon the people to whom it should have brought protection, thus depriving itself of civil loyalty and respect. It would be impossible for anybody more than to guess at the present available armed strength of the Chinese Republic. It might be 300,000 men. It could be half of that. The Chinese Navy is negligible. It consists of four cruisers acquired in 1898, several older and quite obsolete, some torpedo boats, and a few "modern" gunboats, built in Japan. Such is the available strength in arms of three hundred and fifty million people, constituting the most populous republic in the world and possessing the oldest continuous traditions of civilization.

Japan, with only fifty million people, is prepared at all times to put into immediate action an army of 600,000 men, perfectly trained and equipped. Back of that her resources in men are limited only by the sacrifice she is willing to make. Military training is both compulsory and universal. Every Japanese male person who is fit must give twenty years of military service—two in ranks with the colors, five in the first line of reserve, ten in a second line of reserve, and three in the line of home defense. Liability is from the age of seventeen to that of forty. The Japanese Navy consists of four dreadnoughts, sixteen pre-dreadnoughts, thirty-three cruisers, fifty-two destroyers, thirty torpedo boats, and thirteen submarines, and more building in the national navy yards. Twenty years ago Japan whipped China in one year, and lost only 20,000 men. China's loss in men is not so definitely known. It was very much greater and altogether futile, either from a military point of view or as a national experience.

BORROWERS OF TROUBLE.

Experience with real war has given those who have a choice a distaste for anything resembling war. Yet the makers of cotton goods, hosiery, underwear, and similar products are clamoring for what we used to call a tariff war. Nothing will save the country except "readjustment up-"ward to a basis of proper protection "of the textile tariff schedules, with "some form of supplementary legisla-"tion to prevent a flood of sacrifice-"for-ready-cash, cheaply made for-"eign goods." That is looking beyond present prosperity to future troubles, which may prove imaginary, and are unworthy of a nation so blessed as ours in comparison with every other. The nation is in no mood for a new tariff war on any grounds, least of all on the ground of insufficiency of protection to a trade to which the war has brought unlimited opportunities. The world's trade of manufactured cottons is over a billion dollars, and Europe, which raises no cotton, supplies 90 per cent. of it. This country supplies the world with its raw cotton, and only about 7 per cent. of its cotton manufactures. During the war Europe's exports of cotton manufactures fell off one million dollars a day, and the trade was derelict, at the mercy of the taker. No tariff ever did or ever can supply such a measure of "protection" as that. No tariff ever can create such an opportunity to capture world trade. Yet our cotton makers want a tariff war to protect them against future evils.

Are they blind to what is happening? The protection of the war will not cease with the war. The British makers of cotton machinery, employers of 50,000 men, are now making machinery for the production of munitions. The disorganization of trade is immeasurable, and cannot be made good with the cessation of hostilities. The interval is the opportunity of our cotton manufacturers to secure a foothold in the world trade, and they send up a cry for protection in the enjoyment of the domestic market. The nation will have no sympathy with such weakness and incompetence, such inappreciation of present prosperity, such apprehension of what may never occur. Protection for wallers and weaklings is not the nation's present policy.

There is a similar moral in other trades. The woolen trade is too well advised to pray for, or to wait for, higher protection to make profits. The woolen trade is taking profits while the taking is good. The American Woolen Company has taken orders for over seven millions of dollars of war supplies, and has just added a large order for military blankets. This single company's profits on war orders for six months are put at over a million dollars. The boot and shoe industry is similarly stimulated by orders in the millions, a better form of protection than any schedule ever written. An army uniform lasts about a month, whereas in ordinary life a man may buy two suits a year if he is pretty well to do. An army shoe lasts about six weeks, and military orders alone aggregate scores of millions of pairs. We are the world's producers of army shoes, the United States model being preferred by all armies. Five millions of pairs have been sold and shipped, and orders are coming in by the million pairs daily. We export the raw material for clothing, but we import the raw material for shoes, and sell the manufactured article, with results satisfactory to shoemakers at the machines and in the counting room. The makers of cottons who are praying for a high and higher tariff might better imitate the makers of shoes and woolen goods and get busy. The high and higher tariff cry is buried with the cry for cheap and cheaper money.

While our merchants, or some of them, are crying for help, the Germans are looking beyond the war and helping themselves into a state of preparedness for the prosperity they foresee, instead of submitting to present discouragements. For example, here is a current news item from the British press:

> ALBERT BALLIN, Director General of the Hamburg-American Steamship Company, has made the statement that his company has recently closed a contract for seven new steamships, each with a carrying capacity of 17,000 tons, in order that Germany may be ready when peace is declared to take advantage of a trade boom throughout the world, which he maintains will follow.

And here there is a demand for Government help, for Government ships, supported by the Treasury, and supplying cheap freights at the cost of the taxpayers. It is not the time to feel either patience or sympathy with such attacks upon public resources for private profit. These are very good times for many, and might be good times for more if they wished. Work is the remedy for poverty. There are many idle who could work if other workers would let them.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

Corrosive Gases as Weapons.

If the introduction of poisonous gases in war were merely an addition of one more implement or device for killing men outright, with a brevity of suffering which in conceivable conditions could in this way be achieved, there would be no particular reason for criticising the invention or the inventors. Death by asphyxiation passes for humane and merciful in terminating the existence of sick, injured, or troublesome animals, and just why the putting out of the way of human beings, when considered necessary by the law, has never been so done is not easy to explain.

Perhaps it is because instant unconsciousness, the boon supposed to be conferred by the rope, the axe, and the electric current alike, cannot be thus given, and another possible reason is that we all know personally something about how it feels to be smothered, while experiences on the gallows or block, or in the chair, are never related or recalled. The real test, however, of a military expedient, as regards its greater or less "humanity," is how it affects those not immediately killed, and on that score the gases of which we are now hearing so much seem fully to justify the bitter denunciations which their use has excited.

The sufferings of men wounded by the familiar weapons, missile and trenchant, can, indeed, be severe and prolonged, but they have a certain tolerability for the mind, due in great part, perhaps, to the fact that they have been familiar all over the world for innumerable ages, and the responsibility for inflicting that sort of pain is so widely shared that for any people to condemn it would be for that nation to condemn itself. But not only are the sufferings of those who for awhile survive the inhalation of corrosive gases as yet unfamiliar; they are also, according to the victims and to expert observers, of a severity unparalleled in the dreadful annals of conflict.

There is, therefore, a double justification for the indignation which this method of fighting has aroused. Yet it is probably true that if one of the combatants insists on using the dreadful novelty, the others will be obliged in self-defense to imitate the deplorable example. That, as everybody says, is war.

Applying Morals to War Sales.

One of our readers attacks the statement that if the foreign Governments buying arms and other military supplies here have paid for them prices unreasonably high, the fault is their own, because they have employed dishonest or incompetent agents to make the purchases, and not that of the American manufacturers who supplied the goods. This critic says, truly enough, that to every conspiracy there must be at least two parties, but it is untrue that "a foreign agent could not possibly rob his Government if the American manufacturer did not aid and abet him."

There are several ways in which such stealing could be done with no more than the practically compelled acquiescence of the seller, and several in which the acquiescence could be defended as quite innocent. In some of these transactions, if all reports be true, there has been guilty knowledge of the agent's dishonesty, and, even active participation in a conspiracy and a sharing of the guilty profits. For that, of course, there is no defense. But there is little, if any, obligation on the American manufacturer to object to the size of the commission which an accredited agent is going to get, and he has at least a colorable excuse for adjusting his business to the long-established methods of the country with which he is dealing. Even the mentioned case of giving three invoices with medical supplies might be justified, despite the clear evidence of a double "graft," on the plea that only in this way could the desperate needs of a certain army be met.

Some American manufacturers have been credited with refusing orders out of which they knew or suspected outrageous gains would be made by agents or middlemen. The great majority have considered their moral responsibilities fulfilled when to any buyer they turned over goods up to specifications and at a price commensurate with the difficulties and risks incidental to this sort of trade. If these prices have been higher than those demanded in ordinary times, that does not prove them unfair or unreasonable. It is one of war's penalties, and there would be no virtue or utility in making war cheap.

Vindicated, But Not Absolved.

An ancient Babylonian tablet reveals the existence, something like 4,000 years ago, of a law which declared that the child to whom, on going away from home, there had been given what in the natural course of events would be inherited, could not, on the father's death, claim a further share of the paternal estate.

This law is cited as bearing on the case of the Prodigal Son in the parable, and as justifying or excusing the home-keeping brother for protesting against the warmth of the welcome accorded to the returned wanderer. It may do something in the way of proving the technical and legal correctness of that sulky youth's behavior, but it doesn't make him a bit more likable now and probably didn't when he was alive.

The situation was one in which he should have forgotten his rights and joined his father in being merely kind. The old law, though it differs from our own, at least in cases when there is no will, was commendable enough in its way, as law, and the enthusiastic reception of prodigals does naturally try the patience of boys who have worked hard on the farm and had few or no play days. Still, the Babylonians must have been as familiar as ourselves with the possibility of virtue making itself offensive and altogether too logical for the pleasing conduct of human affairs.

That was the fault of the good son, and is one for which no clay tablet will ever cause him to be forgiven.

"WASH DAY" SOLD FOR $100.

An Attractive Little Painting by W. M. Chase—A De Thoren for $125.

An interesting picture, "Wash Day," by William M. Chase, was the first picture to bring three figures at the sale of paintings by American and foreign artists at the Anderson Galleries last evening. This was an attractive little painting. The week's wash completed, most of the clothes are shown on the line, and a girl in a sunbonnet is at one side of the picture pinning on the last pieces. It went to Henry Schultheis for $100.

"A Sunny Morning," by Carleton Wiggins, went to H. E. G. Rohlfs for $92.50; "The Road Through the Fields," Daubigny, went to J. B. Shephard for $90; T. B. Ormond paid $100 for a "November Landscape," by Bruce Crane; the Holland Galleries gave $112.50 for "Landscape in France," by Leon Richet; a panel, "The Necklace," by Ignacio Leon y Escosura, went to Prinz Brothers for $105, and Mr. Schultheis paid $125 for "Horsemen Reconnoitring," by Otto de Thoren. "The Nautch Girl," exhibition picture by Frederic A. Bridgman, went to J. B. Elwell for $320.

The pictures are consigned by J. H. Andrews, E. T. Postlethwait, Mrs. Walter James, and others. Returns were $4,158.

At the sale of antique potteries and porcelains, Chinese and Persian, at the Anderson Galleries yesterday afternoon a Persian bowl, No. 586 of the catalogue, twelfth century, in soft paste with ivory crackle glaze, the design pleasingly simple in red and blue enamels enriched with gold, went to a buyer giving the name of Whitney for $115. The same buyer gave the highest price of the afternoon, $565, for No. 593, a royal Persian cup of the twelfth century. This was of creamy white paste with lustreless glaze and decorated with polychromatic enamels enriched with gold. The design shows in the centre of the cup a king, seated, surrounded by attendants. On the rim is a Cufic inscription on a light blue ground.

An 18-inch temple vase, No. 612, Yung Ching period, cylindrical body, decorated with carp in coral red on a powder blue ground, went to E. L. Baker for $105. A large blue and white jar, No. 665, pear shaped, decorated with the prunus blossom, went to Long Sang Ti Co. for $170, and B. M. Crawford paid $210 for No. 671, a Persian coupe, thirteenth century, decorated in dark green, turquoise blue, having four oblong panels with heart-shaped medallions.

The returns for the day were $3,747 and to date $14,625. The sale will be concluded this afternoon when Persian miniatures, manuscripts, and Indian paintings will be sold.

PAIN KNOWS NOT SEX.

Women Have No Monopoly in the Suffering of War.

New York, May 4, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The interesting article by Miss Jane Addams entitled, "War's Debasement of Women," published in your Magazine Section of May 2, appears to contain an example of the common feminist fallacy which should never cease to be pointed out.

The fundamental assumption on which Miss Addams's article and similar articles are, to some extent, based, is that unusual calamities like the present war are peculiarly hard on women. "As women," says Miss Addams, "we are the custodians of the life of the ages, and we will not longer consent to its reckless destruction; as women we are particularly charged with the future of childhood, the care of the helpless and the unfortunate, and we will not longer endure without protest that added burden of maimed and invalid men and poverty-stricken women and orphans which war places on us."

The implication, confirmed, indeed, by what Miss Addams says later, seems to be that women suffer peculiarly, while men, somehow, have small share in the enumerated hardships. Theirs alone is the joy of battle. A little reflection, however, will show the absurdity of this assumption. If women, as a result of this war, mourn the death of, say, 1,000,000 sons, the crippling for life of 2,000,000 more, the striking down by wounds and disease of another 3,000,000, with all the attendant horrors which fall upon countless individuals, precisely the same number of men thus mourned or thus become a burden to their families and to society have also suffered as individuals; that is to say, 1,000,000 men have been slain, 2,000,000 men have been crippled for life, and 3,000,000 men have suffered from wounds and disease. On the whole, it would seem that the men who have thus suffered, especially those who are maimed for life, have had quite as hard a time as the women whose sons, husbands, and brothers they are. Of course it is an open, various and probably unsolvable question as to whether, for example, a woman or her son suffers more when the latter's arm is blown off. One could hardly arrive at general conclusions on such matters. The real point is that there has been, is, and will be untold suffering which must be borne variously by all members of the community, both men and women, and for which men, as well as women, must in the long run pay.

It is probably unjust also to suggest that the great mass of men is really any fonder of war than are women, that therefore to put a stop to war is peculiarly a woman's question. The truth is that anybody of real sense, man or woman, would wish to put an end to war just as he would wish to prevent, if possible, the accidents and calamities of peaceful life. So far as an article like Miss Addams's tends to increase abhorrence of war, it is good, but it is unfortunate in that its by-product should contain a disjunctive feminist taint. Of course women ought to protest against war, but so ought men; and for very much the same reason. The line of cleavage is between good men and women on the one hand and bad men and women on the other.

The Tragedy of the Far East.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

So far as the Japan-Chinese negotiations are concerned, Japan is undoubtedly in the wrong. Viewed, however, in the perspective light, something might be said in behalf of that unfortunately militaristic nation.

Reverse, if you please, the positions of Japan and the United States or the British Empire, and let Japan enact exclusion laws, and build a tariff wall around her vast continent, colonies and dependencies against the British merchant and the American immigrant. While I do not claim that Japan, in the position of England and the United States might not be tempted to do exactly the same thing she complains of about them, I cannot imagine that England and the United States would sit meekly in the face of such apparently iniquitous mandate. May not what is unjust be rectified in a way fair, if not satisfactory to all parties concerned?

As a human, my heart bleeds for helpless China, but Japan alone should not be held to account for her crime. Without bread, without the means to earn bread, a Jean Valjean breaks into the baker's shop, a Japan into her brother's house. One is the French revolution and the other is the tragedy of the Far East.

The Dangerous Spendthrift.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In today's TIMES "Optimist" has touched the social corruption spot that is carrying us rapidly toward what Herbert Spencer calls the coming slavery—socialism. Every family, however poor, that does not save part of its earnings is doing that which if all did would soon land the race in savage nakedness and homelessness.

A Disclaimer.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

With reference to the mention of my name in the leading article in today's issue of THE TIMES, entitled "Mexican Plotters," and to sundry reports in the daily press, I beg to state that I have no connection with General Huerta, of whose plans, if it be that he has any, I am entirely ignorant.

It Never Doesn't.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I recently overheard the master and engineer of a steamer arguing as to whether the full moon ever saw the setting sun. They could not agree, and as both became quite worked up over it, I hope you will shed a little light on the subject some of these mornings.

NOBLESSE OBLIGE.

He bears a cross whose fathers knew the phrase
"Noblesse Oblige" and handed down to him
Those words like some brave banner he must raise,
Like some high altar candle he must trim
And keep forever burning steadfast, bright.

They do not lift their voices in acclaim
When he has wrought right well with fainting heart—
Has driven on through danger to his aim,
Achieved it, acted well a strong man's part.
That they accept as everlasting right.

That may not justly, worthily, be won;
They close his heart to craft, and fix his eyes
Unwinkingly upon bright honor's sun,
That he may be found worthy in their sight.

To stop in ghostly form from out the past—
In armor bright to block the pleasant ways
And lead him to a rugged peak, at last,
Where they have set an age-old beacon light?

THE CRUEL OUTLOOK FOR PEACE IN EUROPE.

No Way Remains But for the Allies to Agree Upon Terms and Strangle Germany Until She Accepts Them.

By GEORGE M. WRONG, Professor of History, University of Toronto.

Toronto, May 3, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

References to the terms of the coming peace are so numerous that we shall do well to make a cautious survey of the outlook. Great Britain and France have not left the world in doubt as to their hopes. Long ago their Prime Ministers stated in almost identical terms the minimum terms of peace of the western allies if and when they were victorious. The terms involved four points: The restoration of Belgium, the security of the small nations of Europe, the ratification of the frontier of Alsace-Lorraine in the interests of France, (stated by M. Viviani to mean the recession of Alsace-Lorraine to France,) and the destruction of Prussian militarism. We do not yet know all that is in the mind of Russia in regard to the terms of peace, but we may be certain that she will fight tenaciously for the restoration of the old Kingdom of Poland under her suzerainty and for free access to the Mediterranean Sea.

The Allies have still a long way to go before they can enforce such terms. It is practically certain that they will not be willing even to negotiate as long as Germany occupies any part of Belgium or France. When Germany has come to the point of desiring peace she must withdraw to her own frontiers and remain on the defensive. Probably there will be no conference of the powers at which the terms of peace will be debated. We must not forget that in this war two opposing theories of political and national life are in conflict. Unless we are to have renewed war in a short time there can be no compromise. In the end either one theory or the other must prevail. Victorious Germany would have named her terms and would have trampled on the prostrate foe until he yielded. During the early days of the war Maximilian Harden, the most conspicuous journalist in Germany and a man who does not love Kaiserism, said that Germany would not even make peace; she would take what she wanted and then resume her normal life and let any one touch her who dared. It is unbelievable that, in case of victory, the Allies will consent to meet Germany in conference. She has offended too deeply against the conscience of the nations, she has scoffed too much at treaties, to be consulted now in regard to a treaty. The Allies will agree upon the terms to demand and they will do what they can to strangle Germany until she accepts their conditions. It is a hard and cruel outlook, but it would be folly and weakness to try to soften the picture. The issue was clear from the outset. The terrible nature of the task of the Allies is hardly less real today than it was then. Only one thing is different; the vast sacrifices already made demand a decisive result or they will have been made in vain.

The dream of a Congress in which polished gentlemen in black coats shall debate across a table the terms of peace and safeguards from future strife must probably be abandoned. The Treaty of Peace will, it is likely, be limited to two things, national boundaries and the indemnities to be paid by the vanquished side. Many people expect that, if victorious, the Allies could insist on some change of the form of government in Germany. But it would be extremely dangerous to attempt this. An attack from outside on the Hohenzollern dynasty might have the effect of rallying all Germans to its support. Even in the expected case of a decisive victory, the Allies will most likely make no attempt to dictate to Germany as to her form of government. The same thing is probably true as to her armaments on land and sea. A defeated Germany cannot, on the other hand, hope to retain her colonies. She will never recover her lost position in China; Japan will see to that. Nor will opinion in Australia permit that Germany should get back her lost islands in the South Seas. If, as now seems probable, British South Africa conquers German South Africa it is certain that the German flag will never be raised there again. It would be in the interest of the peace of the world that German East Africa should go to Italy, if she shares in the war, rather than back to Germany. The gambler who brought on the war staked everything on its issue and, if he loses, he loses his leadership in Europe and his dominions over the seas.

It is disappointing to have to admit that the peace will determine nothing in regard to armaments. But there will be no armed strife in Europe during at least a dozen years after this war, and it is then that the war on war can be carried on. Those years will show how real is the hoped-for change of heart in Germany as a result of the war. They will show how Russia is likely to use her expected access to the Mediterranean. We cannot now bind forces which we have no means of measuring. For Great Britain the most vital question will be that of sea power. It will serve no useful purpose to demand that, as a result of victory in this war, the German fleet shall be destroyed. What every Briton will demand is that the supremacy of the British fleet, as against that of any other European State, shall remain unquestionable. If, after this war, Germany still challenges Britain's mastery of the sea, this will only mean that another war must be fought. During these latter days Germany has been assuring us that commerce on the sea is not vital to her, and she is right; for eight months she has had no commerce on the ocean, and she is strong still. At the same time it has become clearer than ever that the loss of the command of the sea for even two months would ruin Britain. It is only Germany who has complained seriously of the British mastery of the sea, and no other European power will challenge it. Austria assuredly cannot. The Italians well know that, since the days of Cavour, the British fleet has been a real protector to their coasts and that Britain is the best friend of their ambitions in the Mediterranean. France, too, knows that her position in North Africa is really guaranteed by the British fleet. Last of all, Russia has no dream of rivaling Britain on the sea. The protests in Europe against so-called "navalism" is made in Germany, and the world only laughs scornfully when Germany adds that her protest is in the interests of the smaller States.

But sea power is world-wide in its sweep, and other continents, America, for instance, may wish to rival the strength of the British fleet. It is sometimes said that the British command of the sea is a menace to the United States which that country should resent. In fact, it is one of the chief safeguards of the liberty of America, as the history of the last hundred years abundantly proves. But suppose it is a menace. A Briton is tempted to ask what is the United States going to do about it? Will she build a great fleet to rival that of Britain on the sea? Nothing would please Britain more. The British know perfectly well that a great American fleet would be used for the same purpose as their own, to preserve the free commerce of the seas for peaceful nations. All Britons may well pray that the United States will so resent the power of the British fleet that she will try to rival it.

ACADEMIC NEUTRALITY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

President Butler of Columbia University, in his annual report, calls attention to the shocking spectacle offered by some of the most noted scholars and scientists of the world who, with the advent of the European war, seem to have lost all sense of what is true, honorable, and becoming. It is indeed a disgraceful exhibition, and it makes us wonder what culture means. That such men living in either one of the countries involved may have their perception obscured by lack of perspective and by the heat of passion can be understood and, perhaps, condoned, but the same semblance of excuse can not be made for the same class of men identified with American universities. Yet, from a certain venerable ex-President of a famous university down to the hitherto obscure professor, each has grasped some more or less authentic fact that agrees with his likes or dislikes, and weaves around the same a fabric of argument and assertion. Very often this convinces the average reader or listener, because the writer or the speaker is one whose position entitles him to consideration.

Columbia University, in the last few years, has become especially prominent as a leader in the exchange of international thought, and it is, therefore, unfortunate that some of its teachers have failed to maintain the correct and impartial attitude which is necessary to inspire confidence in their discussions of the causes and effects of the present war. How little they sometimes apply their teachings to practice. For instance, we have been taught by one of the most popular professors at Columbia that, given a certain initial temperature, the efficiency of a heat engine is in proportion to the decrease in the temperature of the exhaust. Now, what must be our conclusion when this same estimable gentleman, while indulging in the very laudable process of defending the actions of his native country, exhales remarks about the enemy at a temperature far in excess of his normal one.

Then again a Columbia professor goes to a deal of trouble to show that Germany had no literature. Here once more we shall have to change our views as developed from our course in that branch of learning. Surely, the librarian should quickly proceed to discover to what nationality Goethe, Schiller, Heine, and a few others belong.

No opinions are worth consideration if they are not based on facts, not merely an isolated case, but a preponderance of them. Otherwise, such opinions can not but hurt the reputation of the man who expresses them. For instance, President Butler, in his address at the opening of the academic year, referred to a statement made to him by a German railway servant, that this is not a people's war, that it is a King's war; and he calls this the most significant statement he heard in Europe.

DRUG VICTIMS.

A Physician's Plan to Temper the New Law to Them.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The Federal anti-narcotic bill, known as the Harrison law, which recently went into effect, is one of the most cruel laws that have ever been passed by overzealous legislators. It cannot be denied that a drastic law is needed to eradicate the widespread evil which seems to be so deeply rooted in this country and is menacing the morals as well as the health of the people. But, considering all those who are addicted to drugs as sick persons, it is cruel to deprive them of that which is absolutely essential for their existence without giving them an opportunity to be cured of their terrible craving. Every person who is addicted to a drug is a sick person and should be considered as a patient, and not as a criminal.

Obviously something has to be done. Let all those who are victims of the drug habit be given an opportunity to be cured. Let the Federal, or State, or local government establish offices, say, in hospitals, where such people could be registered. There they should be able to obtain the drug for use in the presence of a physician, while, at the same time, sane and intelligent effort should be made to effect permanent cure. If drug habitues will learn that there are places where they can have the drug administered in a legal way and possibly be cured, they will undoubtedly flock there. There will no longer exist the necessity for them to break the law by trying fraudulently to obtain the drug.

At the same time the Government will round up all those who are at present addicted. Of course all the records will have to be kept secret and the poor sufferers assured that their names will not receive publicity. Many victims, who at present do not go anywhere for a cure because they do not want to be known as habitues, will in all probability go to institutions where they will be considered merely as numbers. Aside from that the great number of patients will afford ample opportunity for study, and better cures will undoubtedly be devised than are at present in existence. But, most important of all, the law will be made thoroughly effective; there will be no need of breaking it so long as those who are in need of a drug will be able to get it in a legal way. And honest physicians will no longer have to waver between the necessity of evading the law and the duty of alleviating suffering.

Our Interests in China.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your editorial article of May 5, entitled "The Peace of the Orient," you say:

> The tremendous struggle in Europe precludes any interference from that quarter, and from our complacent behavior when Secretary Knox's plan for neutralization of the Manchurian railways was rejected, and from our withdrawal of participation in the six-power loan, Japan would be justified in assuming that we set no great value upon our present interests and prospective opportunities in the Far East.

We cannot be too grateful to the Wilson Administration for discouraging our participation in the six-power loan, for otherwise we should find powerful financial interests, aided by race prejudice, stimulating public opinion in the present crisis unfavorably to the best interests of our country.

EUROPEANS AT THE SPRINGS.

War Refugees in White Sulhpur Colony That Is Rapidly Increasing.

Special to The New York Times.

WHITE SULPHUR SPRINGS, W. Va., May 7.—May has been considered an off month at White Sulphur in former years but not so this year, for many fashionable Americans who have annually gone to Europe in the Spring are forced to stay in this country by existing conditions, and the colony at the Springs is steadily increasing so that in a short while there will be a record-breaking number of vacationists here.

Not only is the colony made up of Americans, but there are many residents of the largest cities in Europe, who are refugees from the signs of strife.

The colony at the Greenbrier was increased by the arrival of several of these people, and a party comprising Madame D'Lay Albertina of Paris and her children, Mr. and Mrs. R. Reynolds D. Albertina of London, and Miss Celia Lynds, also of London; Mr. and Mrs. Philip Eastwick of the latter city, and Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Carter of Paris, were here until recently.

W. De Lancey Kountze of New York returned to the Greenbrier today after an absence of two weeks in New York. He joined Mrs. Kountze, who remained here.

Motor trips between here and the Virginia Hot Springs continue to be popular, and today a party comprising Mr. and Mrs. A. C. Kenge, Miss Beatrice Kenge of New York, Colonel Frank K. Quinn of Utica, N. Y., and the Misses Albert arrived in an automobile from the Virginia resort and took luncheon with friends here. Other arrivals at the Greenbrier today included Mr. and Mrs. John F. Archibald of New York and their three children, Mr. and Mrs. C. F. Roddy of Atlanta, the Misses M. Y. and L. E. Miss Tinker, who went abroad early in the Autumn, was the head of the hospital at Ostend when the Germans took it. She came back later to New York, owing to the death of her father, Henry C. Tinker, who left her a large fortune. She was also engaged in hospital work with L adyPaget in England for a time, and it is possible she may start another hospital in France, and that Miss Irwine and Mrs. McConihe may assist her.

HOW MICROSCOPE EVOLUTED

No history of medicine would be complete without an account of the invention of the microscope. This was to medicine what the telescope was to astronomy. Single lenses were used by the Greeks and Romans, and before them by the Egyptians and Assyrians. Compound microscopes constructed during the seventeenth century were large and unwieldy, and were invented by Hans and Zacharius Jansen, in 1620, and perfected later with better objectives by Robert Hooke.

The instrument he used was about three inches in diameter, seven inches long, and provided with four draw tubes. It had three glasses—an object glass, a middle glass, and a deep eyepiece. The first simple microscope had the lens and the objective united closely together in an inch-long cylindrical tube allowing of no adjustment. The magnification was slight, (10:1,) and the instruments were mostly used as curiosities for looking at the wings of flies, fleas, and the like. For higher magnifying powers, small lenses with short focal lengths were made. These lenses were manufactured from glass, occasionally of rock crystal, by grinding, or were formed by fusion.

"It was with such simple lenses," said Dr. Mortimer Frank in an article on "Medical Instruction in the Seventeenth Century," in a recent issue of The Journal of the American Medical Association, "that the first microscopic researches of scientific value were undertaken. Experimental physiology was now studied at all the universities, and by such early pioneers in the use of the microscope as Leeuwenhock and Malpighi Harvey's discovery of the circulation of the blood was completed. It was reserved for Malpighi in 1664, seven years after Harvey's death, to demonstrate on the lungs of a frog, by the aid of this instrument, the connection between the arteries and veins, the only missing point in Harvey's discovery.

"In connection with the early investigators of the microscope stand the numerous physiologic discoveries by Wharton, Glisson, Nuck, Bartholin, and many others. Indeed, the seventeenth century is the era of the foundation of modern physiology."

GERMAN SCIENTIST ON GAS.

Says the Poisonous Effects Are Due to Carbon Oxide.

In connection with the charges of the use of asphyxiating gases, which were first alleged by the German military administration and have since been officially carged against the Germans at Ypres and elsewhere, the Frankfurter Zeitung of April 19 publishes an article about the poisonous effects of such gases, written by the Berlin pharmacologist, L. Lewin, for the Münchener Medizinische Wochenschrift.

The poisoning, according to this authority, is always caused by carbon oxide, which is developed upon explosion of the shells.

"The effect, even if there is present only a slight percentage (.25 per cent.) in the atmosphere, consists of combination with the breathing substances of the blood, the red blood corpuscles (hemoglobins), into carbon oxide hemoglobins, which are then unable to absorb the oxygen in the lungs. Human beings are more exposed to the poisonous effects of the carbon oxide the more it is laden with carbonic acid, because the gas mixture then gains in weight and seeks the ground.

"For this reason it is quite possible that poisoning may take place in explosions also in the open air, as, for example, when a bomb falls into a trench. Even a shot fired at close quarters from an infantry weapon shows in the resultant wound clear evidence of carbon oxide effects. The same is true in the firing of machine guns and the turret guns of ships. There the men serving the guns are exposed to the effects of the carbon oxide gases, which not infrequently cause stupefaction and mental disorders. It has frequently been observed that the memory of persons present on such occasions is destroyed for years, a fact that cannot be attributed to the shock, but to poisoning."

MAETERLINCK PLAY AT THE BANDBOX

"MIRACLE OF ST. ANTHONY"

This and a Study in Sacrifice by Mrs. Stokes the Best Things in a Promising Program.

The Washington Square Players, that adventurous band that invaded the theatre last February, gave the third program of their season last evening on the stage of the little Bandbox in East Fifty-seventh Street. Again it is a shrewdly varied bill of one-act plays, and again so much good work is done in the staging and the playing of them that the first promise of the venture is renewed and increased interest attaches to the more ambitious plans they are already making for the theatrical season that begins with the coming Fall.

This time the plays are four. There is "In April," a drab little tragedy by Rose Pastor Stokes; "Forbidden Fruit," a bit of filagree brought over from the French by George Jay Smith; "Saviors," a play by Edward Goodman, director of the Players, and "A Miracle of St. Anthony," an ironic comedy by Maurice Maeterlinck, written long ago and now given in the theatre here for the first time. The first and last are the best of these.

The Maeterlinck play is their most impressive undertaking and their happiest achievement. It is really very well done. The story of "A Miracle of St. Anthony" begins when the blessed Saint, wistful, tired, and dusty, comes an unexpected and unwelcome visitor to the house in the Low Countries, where the Lady Hortensia lies dead and her relatives and friends are relishing the funeral feast, enjoying their unctous mourning and fondling the thoughts of their new inheritances.

The blessed saint, on his weary round of miracles in this unbelieving and inhospitable world, has come to resurrect the Lady Hortensia, and the play is an ironic study of the dismay in that lady's circle. Not the well-fed priest, but the servants in the house know the saint when he comes, and it is only the little grand-niece that makes no pretense to cover her disappointment.

Ralph Roeder, a pillar among the players who translated the Maeterlinck text and directed its staging, plays the rôle of the blessed saint. Josephine A. Meyer is capital as the comparatively honest old servant, and Robert Strange does a nice bit as the doctor. The setting is picturesque and most attractive.

The group work of the large cast is marked from time to time by a rude and disturbing change in key, and the whole presentation is hampered by a languor of performance. This disposition is in evidence throughout the evening, and should disappear with succeeding performances. These, by the way, commence tonight and continue on the Thursday, Friday and Saturday evenings of the next three weeks. Possibly another evening will be added.

TO END TYPHUS EPIDEMICS.

Discovery of Louse Transmission Will Aid in Its Eradication.

Among the brightest pages of the history of American medicine are those recording the work of American scientists on the part played by insects in the transmission of disease. The foundation of the later work on the transmission of disease was laid by Dr. Theobald Smith in his work on the transmission of Texas fever of cattle by the tick. That opened up and laid the foundation for practicall all subsequent work, both in the United States and abroad, in this important branch of medical science.

Since then other insect-borne diseases have been added to the list by American scientists—yellow fever through the work of Reid, Carroll, Lazear, and Agramonte; Rocky Mountain spotted fever by Ricketts, King, and McClintic; typhus by Anderson and Goldberger, Ricketts, and Wilder; Plague by McCoy, and anthrax by Mitzmain. By applying the principles determined from a consideration of the work of these investigators to the control of different diseases many of them have been brought under control or have been practically eradicated from this country.

By the application of measures based on the part played by the tick in the transmission of Texas fever of cattle the area of infection has been greatly reduced, and each year sees it still further limited. Since the brilliant campaign of the Public Health Service, under the leadership of White, in New Orleans in 1905 the South has lost its terror of a yellow fever epidemic. Outbreaks of bubonic plague are quickly brought under control by giving attention to the part of the rodent and the flea.

The most recent work of American investigators on insect transmission of disease, that of the conveyance of typhus fever by the louse, promises to have a vital part in the control of typhus in Serbia and Eastern Europe.

Inability of the louse to transport itself, except for very short distances, explains the many times observed fact of the short striking distance of typhus, and that it is those who come into intimate contact with the sick who are most likely to be attacked. As The Journal of the American Medical Association points out, now that the cause and the method of transmission are known, the disease should speedily lose its terrors in civilized communities.

A Sale for Home for Convalescents.

A sale and tea dance for the benefit of the New York Home for Convalescents will be given this afternon at the Hotel Gotham. The home is supported entirely by vountary contributions. Miss Mary Van Buren Vanderpoel is President of the Board of Managers, which is composed of Miss Louise Houghton, Mrs. William Brookfield, Mrs. James E. Pope, Mrs. Stuart Crockett, Mrs. John S. Sutphen, Mrs. George W. Smith, Mrs. H. C. Van Auken, Mrs. Russell W. Moore, Miss Helen D. Nelson, Miss Mary D. Martin, Mrs. W. Edward Vermilye, and Mrs. Walter M. Smith.

Lillian Emerson in Original Dances.

Miss Lillian Emerson, a young classic dancer, appeared yesterday afternoon at the Princess Theatre in a program of original dances. Her program was varied and she did the dances with a finish unusual to one so young. Max Jacobs directed the music. The affair was given under the patronage of Mrs. Otto H. Kahn, Mme. Frances Alda, Mrs. Francis K. Pendleton, Mrs. Benjamin N. Duke, Mrs. W. W. Fuller, Mrs. Elbert H. Gary, rMs. Lawrence Townsend of Washington, and Mrs. Sidney Thayer and Mrs. John B. Thayer of Philadelphia.

A Benefit for Froebel Kindergarten.

The proceeds of the performance at the Colonial Theatre last night were given to the Froebel Kindergarten, which cares for children between the ages of 3 and 6 whose parents are unable to do so. Through the generosity of Dr. Wise of the Free Synagogue the society has its quarters at 155 Clinton Street. Isadore Montefiore Levy delivered an address.

BANS INCOMPETENT M. D.'S.

Tennessee Guards Itself—Massachusetts the Only "Easy" State.

Tennessee, after repeated attempts, has succeeded in obtaining a new medical practice act. This is of particular importance to medical education and medical licensure, not only in Tennessee, but also in the South and in the country as a whole. With the securing of this legislation, every one of the Southern States has provided for standards of preliminary education for those who are to practice medicine, and all Southern States now require that every candidate for the license to practice medicine must have been graduated from a reputable medical college.

In fact, this legislation closes what was perhaps the biggest wide-open door in the country whereby incompetent and untrained doctors could enter the medical profession. No longer, however, may the hordes of graduates of inferior colleges and—worse still—the hordes of those who did not graduate anywhere flock to Tennessee. Hereafter they are barred from the entire South, and for easy entry to the profession they must look elsewhere. They cannot go to Oregon, since Oregon also has amended its laws, requiring graduation from a reputable medical college. There is a chance in Colorado, but that chance is exceedingly slender, since in that State they must pass a severe examination—an examination that cannot be passed after a short course in a cramming school; they must take an examination which has been passed by only two undergraduates in nine years.

"No," says The Journal of the American Medical Association, "hereafter they will doubtless flock to Massachusetts, a State apparently so complaisant in its learning as to see no need of protective laws against ignorance; they will flock to Massachusetts, the last State which continues to open its arms to those who avowedly have not completed their medical training, no questions, in fact, being asked regarding the applicant's educational qualifications. Possibly even Massachusetts may soon see the need for amending its laws so as to send all unprepared candidates back to the colleges and hospitals to complete their training before obtaining the legal right to preside over human lives."

SHAW'S TERMS OF PEACE.

Will Insist That Germans Produce His Plays if They Lose.

A letter written by G. Bernard Shaw to a friend in Vienna is published in the Münchener Neueste Nachrichten and in the Frankfurter Zeitung of April 21. In the letter Mr. Shaw says:

"We are already on the way out of the first and worst phase. When reason began to bestir itself, I appeared each week in great open meetings in London; and when the newspapers discovered that I was not only not being torn to pieces, but that I was growing better and better liked, then the feeling that patriotism consists of insane lies began to give place to the discovery that the presentation of the truth it not so dangerous as every one had believed.

"At that time scarcely one of the leading newspapers took heed of my insistence that this war was an imperialistic war and popular only in so far as all wars are for a time popular. But I need hardly assure you that if Grey had announced: 'We have concluded a treaty of alliance with Germany and Austria and must wage war upon France and Russia,' he would have evoked precisely the same patriotic fervor and exactly the same democratic anti-Prussianism, (with the omission of the P.) Then the German Kaiser would have been cheered as the cousin of our King and our old and faithful friend.

"As concerns myself, I am not unqualifiedly what is called a Pan-German; the Germans, besides, would not have a spark of respect left for me if now, when all questions of civilization are buried, I did not hold to my people. But neither am I an anti-German.

"Militarism has just compelled me to pay about £1,000 as war tax, in order to help some 'brave little Serbian' or other to cut your throat, or some Russian mujik to blow out your brains, although I would rather pay twice as much to save your life or to buy in Vienna some good picture for our National Gallery, and although I should mourn far less about the death of a hundred Serbs or mujiks than for your death.

"I am, even aside from myself, sorry for your sake that my plays are no longer produced. Why does not the Burgtheater play the 'Schlachtenlenker'? Napoleon's speech about English 'Realpolitik' would prove an unprecedented success. If the English win, I shall call upon Sir Edward Grey to add to the treaty of peace a clause in which Berlin and Vienna shall be obliged each year to produce at least 100 performances of my plays for the next twenty-five years.

"In London during August the usual cheap evening orchestra concerts, so-called promenade concerts, were announced in a patriotic manner, with the comment that no German musician would be represented on the program. Everybody applauded this announcement, but nobody attended the concerts. A week later a program of Beethoven, Wagner, and Richard Strauss was announced. Everybody was indignant, and everybody went to hear it. It was a complete and decisive German victory, without a single man being killed."

N. Y. Motor Boat Club Fixtures.

The New York Motor Boat Club, at the foot of West 145th Street, will officially begin its season on May 22 with flag day. On the day following there will be races for cruisers making more than nine miles an hour for those making less than nine; for open boats, both over and for those under ten miles, and a relay race, with the contestants chosen in teams of three by the cofmittee at the last moment. As is true of track relays, the rule that the flag must be exchanged within certain limits will be enforced. Each boat will be required to go across the river and back, a distance of two miles. Twentyfive entries have been assured for the Decoration Day cruise, which this year will be to Croton, because of the fact that the Hudson River section of the American Power Boat Association has its review there at that time. On June 18 and 19 the club will hold its seventh annual Albany and return race. Chairman Scott has arranged three classes for this competition. Class A, for boats of forty feet; B, under forty feet and not in Class A, with a racing rating of forty; C, under forty feet, not in Class A, with a racing rating of less than forty; D, open boats. There will be a prize offered for each four entries. Class C will leave at 10 P. M., June 18, and the others at 1 P. M., June 19. This will give the slow boats two nights and a day out, and a thorough tryout. Ten owners have already signified their intention of entering the competition.

EXPERTS, NOT RIVALS, IS DUVEEN DEFENSE

Counsel for Art Dealers Says It Was a Duty to Criticise Gorer's Goods.

MUCH SPURIOUS PORCELAIN

Major Part of Their Business is to Give Advice to Patrons—Deny Reflecting on Plaintiff.

A statement issued yesterday in behalf of Henry J. and Joseph J. Duveen discloses what their defense will be in the suit for $575,000 brought against them by Edgar Gorer, a rival dealer in antiques. They will deny that they said anything reflecting upon the plaintiff, or his standing as an expert, or concerning any art objects in his possession, further than they were compelled to do by reason of the fact that the major part of their business lies in the giving of expert advice in matters relating to the value of antiques, paintings, porcelains, and other similar objects.

The statement was prepared at the office of Stanchfield & Levy, counsel for the Duveens, and says:

The complete answer to these suits is apparent upon the face of the complaint. Messrs. Duveen, having large dealings with their valued customers, are often asked by these customers for an opinion on objects of art which are exhibited to the customers. Under such circumstances it is the plain duty of Messrs. Duveen to express their best judgment and they cannot do otherwise. By reason of their lifelong experience and the magnitude of their dealings they are in a position to know whereof they speak.

Their opinions, however, are given without regard to the identity of the owner of the objects, whom they frequently do not know, and often a sale is induced by reason of their favorable opinion, as has been the case in several instances with Mr. Gorer's goods. While Messrs. Duveen are not seeking litigation, they are quite prepared to justify and substantiate in the courts any and all statements which they may have made and opinions which they have given.

It was said, further, that a large amount of porcelain has been exhibited and sold in this city which, upon investigation, la ;ed the antiquity with which it was credited. Whenever a spurious piece is sold for genuine and its worthlessness is discovered, the sale of al sorts of antiques is greatly damaged. This was said to be a reason for the calling in of experts to examine art objects offered for sale and not as a reflection upon the plaintiff in the suit.

The intimation is that Mr. Gorer himself, as a large dealer in antiques, should be as greatly interested in the work of protecting buyers as the defendants. When a piece of porcelain is sold for a price above its actual value it hurts the business. The statement says that it "militates against both dealers and collectors, and both of them should use their best endeavors to protect themselves on this score."

Concerning the articles mentioned in Mr. Gorer's complaint, the statement says:

"As to these particular articles, they will be the subject matter of the litigation, and will be properly dealt with in court and at the proper time."

The articles mentioned were a Chinese vase of the Kang Hsi period and two green vases. Mr. Gorer alleges that the Duveens spoke disparagingly of all of these articles and also asserted that Mr. Gorer was not a real expert in antiquities. Mr. Gorer is abroad. His counsel are Ivins, Wolff & Hoguet. They said yesterday that the complaint of Mr. Gorer contained all the information that would be furnished at this time.

TYPHOID'S BIG AFTERMATH.

Death Rate of Survivors Doubled in Three Years Following Illness.

The number of deaths from typhoid fever during the acute stage of the disease is generally known, as well as the number of persons incapacitated as a result of typhoid and the financial loss to the community. But the after effects on the survivors have not been considered by the public. A study of 1,574 cases of typhoid fever in 1911 in the visiting-nurse service of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Company shows that 146 of the patients died while under treatment—a death rate of 9.28 per hundred.

The principal complications in the fatal cases were intestinal perforation and hemorrhage, meningitis, pneumonia, and heart involvement. Of the 1,428 who recovered from the immediate results of the disease, the death rate during the first three years was 54, or nearly twice the normal death rate of 26 for a similar group of persons who had not had typhoid. This increased rate was not uniform for all three years, being greatest during the first year following recovery, less during the second year, and still less the third.

As a cause of death among the fifty-four patients who died within the three years following recovery, tuberculosis heads the list, (39 per cent.,) with diseases of the heart following, (14.9 per cent.) In the United States each year 8,000 deaths occur among persons who have recovered from an attack of typhoid fever, but who, as a result of impaired vitality from the disease, succumb during the first or second year after recovery.

"Similar studies should be made of the after effects of other diseases," says The Journal of the American Medical Association. "We know, for example, in a somewhat general way, that measles and whooping cough, as well as other diseases, are not infrequently followed by tuberculosis; but we have not had an accurate comparison of the actual to the expected mortality, and it is of importance that we should have such comparisons."

In addition to this business, he represented Procter & Gamble, Libby, McNeil & Libby, and the New York Chemical Works. Mr. Anthony was a pioneer in the salmon trade, and brought to this city the first canned salmon, and represented several well-known Columbia River brands. He was a member of the New England Society and the New York Chamber of Commerce, and is survived by his widow, three sons and a daughter.

Prior to his appointment to the Kings County Hospital Dr. Polglase held similar positions at the Cumberland Street Hospital and the Metropolitan Hospital on Blackwell's Island, where he was in charge of 1,700 tuberculosis patients. He came here several years ago from Detroit and resided in the doctors' quarters at the Kings County Hospital. His wife survives him.

DANTE'S DIVINE COMEDY
TRANSLATED BY HENRY JOHNSON, Director of the Bowdoin Museum of Fine Arts.
As a member of the faculty of Bowdoin College, Professor Johnson is in a sense a successor of Longfellow, who served as professor there. It is therefore notable that he should have followed Longfellow's example in translating the "DIVINE COMEDY" into English blank verse. He has succeeded remarkably in his attempt to render Dante's meaning as definitely as possible. His style is both clear and flexible, and his work offers a new and better opportunity to enjoy one of the masterpieces of the world to those of us for whom the original is not available.

YANKS LOSE AFTER FEAST ON BOONE PIE

"Dutch" Leonard Pushes Ray Caldwell Into His First Defeat of Season.

"Dutch" Leonard gave the Yankees a hollandaise dressing at the Polo Grounds yesterday, not alone by his superior pitching, but also by his batting. Southpaw pitchers who are also batsmen are as rare as Java orchids. When "Dutch" got through with the Yanks they were clinging to the furthest point south of a 5 to 3 score. In the Yankee tumble Ray Caldwell went down for his first defeat of the season. These Yanks have been winning so often this season that not even a grouchy dyspeptic who had lost as much as a quarter on the game could complain if they lose once in a while.

Leonard's batting was confined to a three-bagger in the seventh inning, but his pitching was spread all over the whole nine innings. Cap Peckinpaugh did all he could to pilot the Yanks along to victory. He whaled out three hits, one of these a home run into the left field bleachers in the ninth inning but by that time the Bostons had the wrangle safely in hand.

Daniel Boone, the peppery second baseman, didn't play quite as well yesterday as he usually does, but he had a regular excuse. You see, yesterday was Dan'l's birthday. His twenty-second Summer in this vale of tears was observed with elaborate and appropriate ceremonies. The folks back home in Pennsylvania sent Dan'l a big box, overflowing with home cooking, so he had his birthday banquet up in the clubhouse at the Polo Grounds.

In the birthday box were raisin cakes and home-made pies of numerous styles. Cy Pieh tried to horn in on the pie on account of his name, but Dan'l made him eat a piece of angel cake. Not a crumb was left in the birthday box, so now you can understand why Boone didn't gambol over the greensward as playfully as usual.

Some time you just try eating a lot of cake and pie and see how many home runs you can make.

The second team of Giants, which now wears the uniform of the Rochester club of the International League, was at the game under the eye of John Ganzel. Sweet Piez looked longingly at the Polo Grounds and thought of how he might be playing there this season, if it wasn't for that twenty-one player rule of the National League.

Duffy Lewis tried to get smart in the second inning and attempted to stretch a single into a double, but Hartzell made a rifle ball peg to second base and cut Duffy down. Served him right, the smarty. The Yanks showed unbounded ambition in the second. With one out, Peckinpaugh got an infield hit, Mike McNally making a great stop. Boone got a single and Nunamaker walked, filling the bases.

Caldwell then promoted much to his own cause by slamming a single to left, which scored Peck and Boone. Maisel rolled a hot one to Scott, who threw Nunamaker out at the plate. Hartzell whiffed for the third out. Boston got one in the fourth, when Speaker got an infield hit through short and Lewis sacrificed. Hoblitzel went out at first, while Scott spanked a hopper down the third-base line for a single, and Speaker scored.

The Red Sox evened it up in the fifth. Thomas singled and Leonard forced him at second. After Hooper skied to Cook, Wagner was safe on Boone's fumble. Blame that one on the pie. Another run came in the seventh. Leonard tripled to deep centre and scored on Hooper's single.

Boston assumed the victory without the least bit of a doubt in the ninth. Thomas singled and Leonard filed to High. Then Harry Hooper whipped a home run into the right field grand stand, sending Thomas ahead of him. In the Yanks' half of the ninth, with one out, Peckinpaugh hit a home run into the left field bleachers.

Honestly, home runs at the Polo Grounds this season are getting to be as numerous as building lots on Long Island. The score:

Fordham at Columbia Today.

The college baseball championship of New York City will be decided today on South Field, at 3:30, when Fordham meets Columbia in their annual contest. Judging from comparative records the teams are very evenly matched. Captain Kane of Fordham and Captain O'Neale of Columbia have been natural baseball rivals since their first years in college ball, and both are very keen to top off their career with a victory. Both teams have men who are being looked over by the big league Managers. Connie Mack has his eye on Carroll, the Maroon third baseman, and Lee Magee, the Brookfeds' Manager, is casting longing glances at "Bobby" Watt the Columbia prototype of "Eddie" Collins. It will be an interesting feature to see these two collegians in action. The pitching dual will probably be between Walsh, the Fordham mainstay, and George Smith, the Columbia marvel.

Dartmouth Blows Up at Brown.

Special to The New York Times.

PROVIDENCE, R. I., May 7.—One bad inning, in which Dartmouth's errors were largely responsible for the scoring, gave Brown victory over her ancient opponents on Andrews Field today, 7 to 3. It was the first meeting of the ball teams of the two colleges in eight years and a large crowd turned out to watch the play. For four innings Dartmouth played errorless ball, but in the fifth the whole team went ballooning. Three errors, a base on balls, a man hit by the pitcher, followed by a single and a triple, sent seven runs across the plate for Brown. Dartmouth's runs, two of which came in the third, resulted from a couple of singles by Williams and Eskeline. The score:

GIANTS LOSE IN BIG BATTING GAME

Led Braves Twice, but Finally Had to Succumb to Defeat, 11 to 7.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Mass., May 7.—In spite of their ability to take the lead, twice by two runs and once by one run, against the Braves within the first four innings today, the Giants were unable to continue their aggressiveness, and, in a heavy batting match, saw the champions come through with a 11 to 7 victory.

It was a weird day for the pitchers, almost a hurricane blowing straight at the box through the natural flue caused by the location of the stands, and three New York boxmen and two Boston flingers were hit to every corner of the lot. Against Schupp, Fromme, and finally Ritter, the Braves corralled fourteen hits, one being a triple and six being doubles, while against Dick Rudolph and Pat Ragan the Giants made fifteen hits, poling four doubles and a triple for extra measure.

Early in the fray errors and bases on balls had an important part, while later, when the wind was at its highest, it played havoc and made the outfielders look like novices, so much of a mess did they make of judging the long hits. New York looked strong at the start, and had young Schupp been able to do his best work against the head wind there easily could be another story to tell tonight. McGraw pulled Schupp out of the game in the third inning when, with the Giants leading, 4 to 2, Smith drove out a double and Maranville made a single which, with a mix-up by Murray, gave the Braves the tieing runs. Then Fromme took up the burden, but in the fourth, when the Giants were a point ahead again, the Braves reached him for two singles and three doubles, the product being four runs, after which the Braves never were headed, although there was much hitting and considerable scoring by both teams before the festivities ended.

The Giants pounded Ragan even harder than they did Rudolph, but the Braves had the edge, and increased it from time to time to keep pace with the visitors' heavy execution with their war clubs. Finally Ritter replaced Fromme for New York, but the Braves made three singles and a double against him, thus keeping up their batfest to the finish.

In the first inning the Giants scored two runs on an error by Maranville and successive hits by Fletcher and Burns, while the home team tied the score in the second on a ticket to mith, Maranville's double and a single by Rudolph. In the third the Giants went ahead by two runs, again Egan allowing two bases on an error and Burns's double and a hit by Robertson following. Then, in the third, Magee's pass, Smith's two-bagger, and Maranviel's single, tied the score a second time, 4 to 4.

Again, in the fourth, with Ragan pitching, New York forced ahead, this time by one point only on Fromme's single, a pass to Doyle, and Lobert's hit, but in Boston's half of the fourth Ragan's opening single, Moran's sacrifice, Egan's single, and clean doubles by Connolly, Magee and Smith, netted four runs for the Braves and established them in an 8 to 5 lead. After this the Braves scored three runs and the Giants two, the Giants getting their men around in the seventh on doubles by Lobert and Burns and Robertson's hit to centre. A pass to Connolly was followed by Schmidt's triple in the sixth for Boston, and in the next inning, after Ritter had ticketed Maranville, Gowdy, Ragan and Connolly came through with singles and for two more runs.

The wind boosted the long hits far into the outfield all afternoon and the garden keepers had an awful time of it. Murray and Doyle did no hitting today, both passing up several chances to keep the Giants going, even when they were behind. Burns made four fine hits, and Robertson got three, while Maranville led the Braves' hitters with two doubles and a single. The score:

CHICAGO, May 7.—Wildness of Chicago's pitchers gave Cincinnati an easy 9 to 2 victory today, the Cubs's first defeat in eight games. Benton was baffling with men on bases, but in stopping a line drive from Schulte's bat in the sixth he split a finger on his pitching hand and may be out of the game for weeks. Ames let down in the ninth. Herzog played in his first game since his suspension several days ago. Score:

JACK REED STOPS HEMPEL.

Jack Reed of Toledo, Ohio, stopped Jack Hempel of California in the eighth round in the main bout last night at St. Nicholas A. C. Reed's weight was announced as 192½ pounds, while Hempel tipped the scale at 186. Reed had all the better of the bout from the start, until Hempel was counted out.

The Californian kept coming all the time with his head down, and he played for his opponent's stomach. Time after time Reek broke through his guard and brought his left up hard on Hempel's chin. In the fourth round Hempel stopped to hold an argument with Referee Billy Roche, and Reed politely stepped back not to interrupt the conversation.

A terrific right smash on the nose brought the blood spurting from Hempel's nasal organs, and he was very groggy. Reed also was leg weary. In the seventh Reed took a long leed. He had Hempel going again early in the eighth. A left hook to the stomach and a right to the jaw put an end to the contest. Hempel just flopped down and was counted out.

George Rodel, the Boer, stopped Ernie Stanton, a soldier from Governors Island, who was substituted at the last moment for Terry Keller, who failed to show up, and did not notify the club until just before the time for the bout to go on.

Stanton's eye was badly cut early in the first round, and the blood was streaming down his face before they had been boxing thirty seconds. Rodel played for the injured eye, and soon had the soldier in distress. Rodel took a big lead in the second, outboxing and outhitting his opponent in all the exchanges. The end came early in the third with a left to the jaw and a pile-driving right into the stomach, and Stanton crumpled up on the softest spot he could find in the ring.

The semi-final was a rattling ten-round bout between two bantamweights—Corona Kid and Willie Aste. Both boys were lightning fast. Aste had a shade on his opponent on points. In the sixth round their heads came together and Corona Kid's left eye went in mourning and almost closed, but he kept at his task and frequently made Aste cover up to avoid punishment. The rounds were about evenly divided.

NEW YORK BOXERS WIN.

Successful in National Championship Preliminaries on Coast.

All of the New York boys who took part in the preliminaries of the amateur boxing tournament at the Panama-Pacific Exposition at San Francisco on Thursday night were returned victors, according to advices received at Amateur Athletic Union Headquarters yesterday. William Spengler, the metropolitan heavyweight champion, was unable to compete, because his right hand was injured while he was training on the way to the coast.

Three national champions were disposed of in the preliminaries. These were Edward C. Carr of the Harmony Club, Boston, 175-pound class; Tony Vatlan, Lincoln Athletic Club, Brighton, Mass., 115-pound class, and Howard Root, Cleveland Athletic Club, 108-pound division.

Matty Herbert of the Union Settlement A. C., New York, who was defeated by Root in the finals of the national championships, turned the tables on the Cleveland boy in the 108-pound competition.

Allie Nack, another New Yorker of the Union Settlement A. C., triumphed over Jack Rhodes, the clever 125-pound boxer of the Olympic Club, San Francisco, while August Ratner of the Ninety-second Street Young Men's Hebrew Association took the measure of C. Gaviatti of the Olympic Club, San Francisco.

In the heavyweight class, Arthur Sheridan of the Trinity Club, Brooklyn, won from R. Peterson of the Olympic Club after the latter had defeated the national heavyweight champion, Ed Carr. A. Kaufman, also of the Trinity Club, Brooklyn, scored over J. Vincelli of Salt Lake City in the 158-pound division.

All the New York boys are in fine condition, Spengler reported to the A. A. U. They will be tendered a dinner at the Olympic Club tonight.

Weir Stops Harris In One Round.

At the New Polo A. A. last night Hughey Weir knocked out Sailor Harris in the first round of what was to have been a ten-round bout. Another ten-round bout was scheduled between Jack Connors and Jack Elliott, but the latter refused to go on because of the small crowd present. In a preliminary six-round bout Tommy Mooney defeated Jack Novit.

The Brookfeds hit the ball hard when they did hit it at all at Washington Park yesterday and six of the twelve hits they made were for extra bases, and they won from Kansas City 4 to 1. Claude Cooper, who has been playing centre field since Benny Kauff was suspended, celebrated his last day in that position by getting a triple, two doubles, and a sacrifice in four trips to the bat. Benny's suspension has been lifted and he will be back in the centre garden this afternoon. Tom Seaton was on the firing line for Brooklyn, and although he allowed six hits, he tightened up like a clam when hits meant runs and the Westerners were able to push only one tally across the plate.

It was a cold, bleak day for baseball and with heavy clouds hanging low and a high wind blowing the fans sat huddled in the stands trying to keep warm. Kansas City scored their lone tally in the opening inning. Chadbourne, the first man up, walked, and stole second, getting away with the only steal of the game. Rawlings fanned, but Stovall gave the ball a healthy wallop into left field, scoring Chadbourne and coming up on third when the ball was returned to the infield.

Gene Packard did the flinging for Kansas City and his performance could not be classified as a howling success. Now and then, the Brookfeds would gather in two or three hits in a cluster, and it was only because of the gilt-edged, errorless fielding back of him that the Ward score was kept down to four runs. Although Gene was unable to hold the Brooklyn batters at bay, he had marvelous control of the sphere and did not pass a man.

In the second inning Holt, the first man up for the Brookfeds, singled to left, and then Gagnier slapped one to right, and both men romped home when Land landed on one of Packard's offerings for two sacks. Land never reached home. Seaton fanned, Anderson grounded out, Perring to Stovall, and Delehanty went out, Kenworthy to Stovall. In the next inning Brooklyn chalked up another tally on the scoreboard. Cooper banged out his second double and danced around eagerly on the path to third while Evans and Myers popped out. Holt, however, sent the substitute centre fielder home when he drove one over second into centre for a single.

Kansas City's fast fielding kept Brooklyn from scoring again until the eighth. Mr. Cooper, whose batting percentage for yesterday's game was just an even 1,000 per cent., stung the ball to the brick wall in right field for a triple in the eighth and crossed the rubber when Hap Myers tripled to the same place.

Manager Lee Magee, who has been out of the game for the past few days because of a sore finger, will probably direct his charges from the bench and coaching lines for several days to come, as his finger is still in bad condition. The score:

BALL GRABBERS, READ THIS.

Guy Clarke Fined $3 for Taking Ball Hit Into Polo Grounds Bleachers.

It isn't safe to try to get away with a ball when a home run is hit into the bleachers at the Polo Grounds. Yesterday in the ninth inning Peckinpaugh of the Yankees hit a home run into the left field bleachers and the ball was grabbed by Guy Clarke, a chauffeur, of 68 West Ninety-eighth Street, who tried to get away with the prize. Tom Kelly, one of the park policemen, tried to persuade Clark to give it up but he refused, so he was arrested by a policeman who was summoned from outside of the park.

In the Night Court Magistrate Sims told Clarke that he had no more right to take a baseball at the Polo Grounds than he had to take his (the magistrate's) watch. James McIlravy of the park police stated to the court that between twenty-five and thirty balls were lost at the grounds each week.

SCHOOLBOYS PLAY FOR TENNIS TITLE

Bowman Leads in Tournament for Yale A. A. in Westchester County Championship.

Twenty-four high school boys competed in the tennis tournament of the Yale University Athletic Association for the Westchester County interscholastic championship yesterday on the courts of the New York Lawn Tennis Club at Columbia Oval, Williamsbridge. The list included the best young players in the country, and several hard fought battles were witnessed. The incentive for the youngsters was the selection of the winner and runnerup in the tournament to compete at the Yale interscholastic championship at New Haven on May 22. Three players are left in the semi-final round and two in the round before the semi-final. The three semi-finalists represent Mount Vernon High School.

Herbert L. Bowman, winner of the junior metropolitan championship on the West Side Courts last Fall, is favored as the winner. He won three matches in impressive fashion and reached the semi-final round. In the first round he disposed of E. Preston of Irving School, 6—3, 6—0, and eliminated H. E. Caldwell, New Rochelle H. S., 6—0, 6—0. His match with R. S. Dubois, Yonkers H. S., in the third round, was a harder test, as he was forced to deuce set to win. Dubois played a plucky game against the champion, but the latter, in spite of strain of the two previous matches, successfully repelled his opponent's rallies.

H. W. Forster, Yonkers H. S., runner-up to Bowman in the championship, met his Waterloo in the first round at the hands of M. MacDuffie, White Plains H. S., in straight sets. The latter was put out of competition in the second round by W. B. May, Jr., Holbrook School, scoring but one game in two sets. May is expected to be finalist with Bowman, as he showed splendid form, and good knowledge of the finer points of the game in his two matches. The Summary:

Yale University A. A. Interscholastic Tournament.—First Round—M. MacDuffie, White Plains High School defeated H. W. Forster, Yonkers, High School, 7—5, 6—1; W. B. May, Jr., Holbrook School, defeated K. C. Porter, New Rochelle High School, 6—1, 6—2; R. G. Skinner, Peekskill Military Academy, defeated D. Stiles, Peekskill Military Academy defeated J. P. McQuade, Mamaroneck High School, 6—4, 6—2; J. P. Kammerer, Pleasantville High School, defeated E. W. Noimoll, Holbrook School, 6—4, 6—3.

CHAMPION AGAIN LOSES.

Miss Bjurstedt's Injury Causes Her Defeat in West Side Tennis Match.

Miss Molla Bjurstedt of Norway, national indoor champion, lost another match yesterday in the West Side Tennis Club tournament at Forest Hills, L. I., when, with E. H. Whitney as a partner in the first round of the mixed doubles, she was defeated by Mrs. S. F. Weaver and Charles M. Bull, Jr., after the hardest-fought contest of the tournament by the score of 9—7, 4—6, 9—7. Miss Bjurstedt was suffering from the injury to her ankle she received on Thursday, and was unable to cover the court with anything like her customary speed. In spite of the handicap the champion played a plucky game and forced the winners to forty-two games before a decision was reached. Miss Bjurstedt has now lost the women's and mixed doubles and will play Mrs. Marshall McLean this afternoon in the final round of the singles.

King Smith and G. Carter Shafer, the Seventh Regiment cracks, qualified for the final round of the men's Class A doubles through a straight set victory over Ralph L. Baggs and Frederick M. Baggs. The former pair easily outclassed their opponents, and they were not required to extend themselves.

Nearly all the classes had reached the final or semi-final round, and with fine weather the committee expects to wind up the tournament this afternoon. The summaries:

Mixed Doubles, Class A.—First Round—Mrs. S. F. Weaver and Charles M. Bull, Jr., defeated Miss Molla Bjurstedt and E. H. Whitney, 9—7, 4—6, 9—7.

Second Round—Mr. and Mrs. Lyle E. Mahan defeated Miss C. Peck and K. Peck, 8—6, 6—4.

Men's Doubles, Class B.—Third Round—M. P. Ackerland and L. Clark defeated S. E. Davenport and H. C. Worth, 4—6, 6—2, 6—4.

Semi-Final Round—Groesbeck and Bishop defeated Henshaw and Watrous, 7—5, 6—3.

Men's Doubles, Class C.—Semi-Final Round—Dr. Barringer and S. F. Weaver defeated C. F. Miller and E. L. Satterlee, 3—6, 6—7, 7—5.

Columbia Tennis Victory.

Special to The New York Times.

EASTON, Penn., May 7.—Columbia had little trouble in defeating Lafayette in tennis this afternoon on the Lafayette courts. The New York racquet wielders won every match except one in the singles, and thus finished with a score 5 to 1. The courts were wet and slow, but the play was interesting and much of the time hard fought. The best matches were the singles between Pardee and Smith and the doubles in which Burn and Pardee met Tunis and Lamb. Summaries:

Singles.—Tunis, Columbia, defeated Reynolds, Lafayette, 6—3, 6—1; Smith, Columbia, defeated Pardee, Lafayette, 6—0, 4—6, 6—3; Von Bermuth, Columbia, defeated Keller, Lafayette, 7—5, 8—6, 6—4; Burn, Lafayette, defeated Lamb, Columbia, 3—6, 6—1, 6—1.

Doubles.—Tunis and Lamb, Columbia, defeated Pardee and Burn, Lafayette, 6—3, 3—6, 6—8; Smith and Von Bermuth, Columbia, defeated Keller and Reynolds, Lafayette, 6—1, 6—2.

BOARD OF OFFICIALS.

A. A. U. to Endeavor to Have Competent Men to Officiate at Meets.

Herman Obertubessing, Chairman of the recently appointed Officials Committee of the Metropolitan A. A. U., has asked the members of the board to name a date for their first meeting, which probably will take place during the third week of this month. There is no more important work to be done this Summer than the selection of a competent list of officials to serve at all games in this district, and it will be the task of Obertubessing's committee to make these selections. The committee is composed of Herman Obertubessing, John J. McHugh, J. P. Cooke, John M. Connolly, Jacob W. Stumpf, T. J. Sullivan, Fred J. V. Delany, and Mathew P. Halpin.

Each of these men will name his own choices for officials, and from the lot will be selected the standing list. Promoters of all meets throughout the Metropolitan Association will have to select at least two track judges, two field judges, two inspectors and two timers from the A. A. U. nominations, in accordance with a resolution passed at the last annual convention of the local organization.

In order to secure competent officials for meets not within reach of New York men, the Commissioners of the various districts will be asked to draw up lists of their own.

All the selections will have to be approved by the Board of Managers, and will be presented to them for a mail vote as soon as completed.

THREE BIG DUAL MEETS.

Yale, Cornell, and Penn Likely to Defeat Opponents Today.

The intercollegiate championship track and field timber of six of the leading candidates for the title this year will be on exhibition today, when three dual meets will be contested. Yale's strong squad will oppose Princeton on the latter's cinder path; Harvard meets the sturdy Cornell aggregation at Cambridge, and Dartmouth and Pennsylvania clash at Philadelphia. On the form shown by their representatives so far this season Yale, Cornell and Pennsylvania should be the victors.

The Elis will make their bid for the intercollegiate championship this year with a team that appears the strongest that has represented them in several years. Wilkie, Overton, Poucher, Loveman, Farwell, Oler, Roos and Talbot form a fine combination and appear much stronger than their rivals at Princeton. The Tigers' hopes depend on Roberts, Stewart, Cooley, Richardson and McKenzie.

Jack Moakley of Cornell has not shown his hand as yet this season, but reports from Ithaca indicate that he will have his usual strong aggregation in the field against Harvard. The Crimson athletes have not been on exhibition as a team this Spring.

Pennsylvania, with Meredith, Lippincott, Ferguson, Pecso, Lockwood, Kaufman and others of their calibre, will undoubtedly have little trouble disposing of Dartmouth.

COLUMBIA IN DUAL MEET.

Coach Wefers Takes Seventeen Men to Brown for Games Today.

Columbia's track team left last night for Providence for a meet with Brown this afternoon. It is the first time in a score of years that these colleges have been opponents in a track and field meet, though both annually compete in the intercollegiates. The Blue and White squad is in fine condition and confident of victory. No comparison can be made on the performances of either team to date. Columbia triumphed over Wesleyan last week by the score of 76 to 50, while Brown has defeated Amherst.

Coach Bernie Wefers of the Blue and White took seventeen men with him. He counts on winning many points with Captain Frank Brady in the hurdles, Graham in the running broad jump, Loescher in the high jump, Harvitt in the sprints, Whelan in the half mile, and Olmsted and Russell Beatty, intercollegiate champion shot putter, in the weight events. It will be Beatty's first appearance in a dual meet this season and he is out to break his own record.

Busy Day for N. Y. U. Athletes.

With every team engaged, New York University athletes have one of their most strenuous periods ahead of them today. Four athletic contests are scheduled. Both track and baseball teams will go to Rutgers. The baseball team has already lost one game to the New Brunswick representatives and will do their best to sway the tide in their favor. While the nines are batting, the track teams will also be engaged, and, as the Violet team is the strongest of several years, the New York University boys have hopes of taking the meet. The home campus will be the scene of two athletic meets, the hitherto undefeated tennis team meeting the Syracuse racquet wielders, while the freshman baseball nine will play Cooper Union.

Track Meets at Hackensack.

HACKENSACK, N. J., May 7.—A track meet for students in the Northern New Jersey Interscholastic League will be held at Oritani Field, Hackensack, tomorrow afternoon, under the auspices of the Princeton Alumni Association. Englewood, Rutherford, Passaic, Paterson, Nutley, and Dickinson High of Jersey City will be represented. There will be four contests for juniors. The annual interclass track meet of the Newman School will be held tomorrow afternoon on Newman Field.

Middlebury Athletes Win.

Special to The New York Times.

MIDDLEBURY, Vt., May 7.—Middlebury College defeated St. Lawrence University in a track meet today, 71½ to 45½. Middlebury took eleven firsts in the thirteen track events. Jones, the college crack miler, lowered the local college record. Lee of Middlebury was the highest individual point getter, with 21 points.

Coyne Arrives in Chicago Afoot.

T. M. Coyne of Holy Cross Lyceum, this city, the amateur long-distance runner, who turned pedestrian to walk across the continent in time to participate in the Exposition marathon, arrived in Chicago on Thursday, and was the guest of the Illinois Athletic Club. Coyne left City Hall on April 1 and he expects to reach San Francisco during the last week of July.

Merit System for Fordham Managers.

At the May meeting of the Executive Committee of the Fordham University Athletic Association held yesterday it was decided that the proposed merit system to rule in the future elections of the various assistant managers should be put to a vote of the whole undergraduate body at the last mass meeting of the year on May 25.

RACING TO SAVE AMERICAN HORSE

With the opening of the metropolitan racing season only two weeks off and the Constitutional Convention at Albany in session, the opinion was expressed by a number of horsemen yesterday that the members of the convention during their deliberations would give some attention to the provisions of the Agnew-Hart anti-betting law, which has become so riddled by court decisions that its purport is not clear. These turfmen declare that the phraseology of the law has given to the prosecuting officers in various counties the privilege of interpreting its meaning to suit themselves.

In several cases the higher courts have maintained the right of the individual to make a personal wager on a horse race, but the Directors' liability clause must be reckoned with.

The court decisions to date have been gratifying to those who have always been on the side of law and order in sport, but it is believed by many that the situation would be more satisfactory if the Constitutional Convention should define the limitations of the law, so that the courts, the turf governors and the public may know exactly where they stand.

At the offices of the different racing associations in New York yesterday it was said the men most vitally interested in racing have not asked for any action on the part of the Constitutional Convention.

With more and better racing in prospect for this season, additional recruits of owners and patrons may be looked for, especially as the courts have given some degree of latitude for individual wagering. There has been a marked change of sentiment in connection with racing all over the United States. This is due in a great measure to the belief that the sport is essential to the continuance of horse breeding.

The war in Europe is exhausting the supply of desirable horses for cavalry and artillery purposes on the Continent and has caused this country to be overrun with commissioners who have early sought equine recruits in every section from the Atlantic to the Pacific Coasts. The alarm sounded some years ago, that the discontinuance of racing meant the death blow to the horse breeding industry was disregarded at that time, but today, with half the civilized nations at war, the appeal for horses of a certain type cannot be filled.

It is asserted, therefore, by breeders and turfmen, that what was considered at that time merely sentimental pleading, has become a stern necessity, affecting the country in a most important manner, through the sale of American brood mares. When the Jockey Club uttered its protest against the virtual confiscation of the $10,000,000 invested in racing properties and the breeders asked what was to become of their valuable stallions and brood mares and racing stock, their cry fell upon deaf ears.

Turfmen insist that time and altered conditions have brought the general public to a realization that racing is an institution worthy of assistance. Without racing they assert that the thoroughbred would deteriorate and there would be no incentive to preserve the best of the species.

FOURTEEN IN DERBY.

Best American Horses in Kentucky Fixture to be Run Today.

LOUISVILLE, Ky., May 7.—Fourteen starters, the cream of American thoroughbreds, as judged by their two-year-old form, probably will face the barrier at Churchill Downs tomorrow afternoon when the forty-first annual renewal of the Kentucky Derby will be run.

The field is the argest in recent yearsl. The race is over a mile and a quarter course, and is for three-year-olds. Its value approximately is $15,000. Nineteen horses have been officially entered.

COLUMBIA PICKED TO WIN.

Pennsylvania and Princeton Crews, However, Strong for Today's Race.

Special to The New York Times.

PRINCETON, N. J., May 7.—Columbia is the favorite here tonight for tomorrow's triangular regatta between Columbia, Princeton, and Pennsylvania. The showing the Blue and White oarsmen made in their practice on Lake Carnegie this afternoon did much to strengthen the impression already current that Coach Rice's eight is by far the smoothest combination of the three entrants. Rice, however, is not displaying overconfidence. He is sure he has a good crew, but he is equally certain that he has two strong opponents in Princeton and Penn.

Pennsylvania had two rows on Lake Carnegie today. Both in the morning and afternoon they showed up a good deal better than they did yesterday, but it is still the general belief that Vivian Nickall's men are below Princeton and Columbia in form. The Quakers, however, have a rugged and strong eight, and this fact may serve to make up for what they lack in watermanship.

Princeton had its last workout late this afternoon, both the 'Varsity and freshman crews taking an easy paddle over the course. Dr. Spaeth, coach of the Tiger crews, had nothing to say about the prospects of his charges, but it is believed that Princeton has the best crew in recent years, and that Columbia will have the hardest kind of a struggle to defeat the Orange and Black boat.

"We are rowing two good crews tomorrow," said Rice tonight, "they're husky ones, and hard to beat, but we will be there at the finish. We have had a deal of trouble with the smooth water and the buoyancy caused by the shallowness of the lake, but those things won't prevent us from rowing a hard race tomorrow."

STANFORD CREW COMING.

Elated at the success of the two crews in the annual race on the Oakland estuary, the Stanford University people have decided to send a crew to participate in the races at Poughkeepsie this year. Three years ago a Stanford crew made this trip, but its backers were sadly disappointed by the fact that the Cardinal colors were nowhere in the race. This time better results are expected. The rowers from Washington had expected to win the championship of the Pacific Coast again this year. But Stanford showed surprising form and defeated both Washington and the University of California in the final struggle.

In 1912 a Sanford crew went to Poughkeepsie. The boys went early and for seventeen days trained faithfully on the new course. The climate was against them and they made a very poor showing. This year they will leave here June 14, arriving at Poughkeepsie four days later. That will allow them six days for training on the Hudson. F. L. Guerena, coach of the Stanford eight, was coxswain for the 1912 crew. He had the chance on the occasion of his former journey to learn what was wrong with the Californians, so he knows what must be guarded against. It is his idea not to have too long an interval between the arrival of the Westerners and their hard contest with the crack college oarsmen of the East. That is why the Stanford men will be on the scene only a week before the final contest.

Funds for the trip have been raised by an appropriation of $1,000 from the organization of students and $1,800 subscribed by friends.

During the intervening time the members of the crew will continue their training and rowing on the estuary at Redwood City. Guerena believes that the travel trip of four days will not do any harm and that the week at Poughkeepsie will put them in fine condition again.

The Stanford crew is made up as follows: John H. Goodman, coxswain; stroke, Rix Maurer; 2, Albert H. McEuen; 3, Charles H. Orme; 4, William H. Bloeser; 5, Gustav H. Jacomini; 6, W. A. Green; 7, F. N. Worth; 8, I. M. Hulsman. In addition two substitutes will accompany the crew, also Coach F. L. Guerena and Assistant Manager James H. Jeffers.

TIGER FOOTBALL ENDS.

Coach Rush Gave Candidates Severe Tests in Spring Practice.

PRINCETON, May 7.—Princeton's Spring football season, the busiest of any the Tigers have ever had, came to an end today, when Coach Rush out his charges through a regular four-period game. It is the first time since football was adopted at Princeton that Spring practice has meant anything more than a perfunctory ceremony—something that had to be gone through with in order to preserve football traditions. Rush had made it a good deal more than a ceremony, as the fifty men who reported daily during the past month will testify. There have been scrimmages twice a week, and they have been th kind of scrimmags that ordinarily are not held until the Fall season is well on its way. Every department of the game has been drilled into the men, from falling on the ball to forward passing and interference.

Moving pictures have played a big part in the Tigers' Spring work. Coach Rush has had pictures taken of various plays in scrimmage, with particular attention to the plays built around the forward pass. Rush will analyze these pictures, and they will form the basis of subsequent blackboard lectures to the men.

Football will be resumed at Princeton early next September. Practice will begin probably during the first week. Coach Rush and his squad of assistants will be in Princeton before that, however, to outline the plans for the Fall campaign.

Cutler Wins Billiard Match.

Albert G. Cutler and Tom Gallagher completed their five nights' exhibition match at 18.2 balkline billiards at Maurice Daly's Billiard Academy, Forty-ninth Street and Broadway, last night, with the Boston billiard player again registering a victory over his veteran opponent by the score of 300 to 50. This is the worst defeat Gallagher has suffered during the exhibition, and it required just fourteen innings for Cutler to complete his string of 300 points. He scored high runs of 89, 86 and 55, with an average of 21 6-14. Gallagher's best run was fifteen points, and he averaged 3 11-13.

SKEE-BALL HAS ARRIVED.

Old Princeton Football Stars Open Room in Times Square.

Skee-ball, the fascinating sport which has found so much favor at the seaside resorts and in Philadelphia, was introduced to New York last night when the Manhattan Skee-ball alleys, under the proprietorship of Arthur, (Beef,) and Bert Wheeler, the Princeton football stars of some years ago, were opened on Seventh Avenue, opposite the Times Building. A representative gathering of clubmen tried their hand at the innovation sport and found in it a game that required much of the delicacy of billiards, even though it more nearly resembles bowling. Pat McDonald, the champion weight thrower, was doing his duty as one of the traffic squad at Forty-third Street and Broadway when he heard that skee-ball had made its début, and as soon as he was free tried the game. He says weight throwing is easy compared to making a good score on the alleys. There were a lot of others, too, who came to the same conclusion.

The new sport is really a variation of bowling with a hump two-thirds of the way down the alley that shoots the ball, which is about the size of a duck-pin ball, up to cups arranged on a sort of a large, grooved target. If you are lucky you may make a score of 200. But, just to show that a high degree of skill is called for, it is only necessary to say that a perfect count totals 450. You would like skee-ball as a pastime, and you would like it even though you were not a player, for it is as interesting to watch as to take part in. An automatic counter adds the total score as the player bowls, so that the spectator can see instantly how the game is going. From the indications last night, however, there won't be many spectators when there is a vacant alley. The game really gets one. You go up, confident that it is your turn to roll a high total, and you don't. But you can't discourage a skee-ball player.

The play for a real match calls for a series of ten frames of nine balls each. The best score that has ever been rolled stands to the credit of "Chief" Bender, formerly of the Athletics, who is the owner of an alley in Philadelphia. He rolled 3,500 in ten frames, and in one frame made the perfect score of 450.

SQUADRON A PLAYS POLO.

Polo players from Squadron A played their first practice match of the season yesterday at Van Cortland Park, where the Blues defeated the Whites by 5 goals to 4. In spite of the fact that neither the players nor ponies were seasoned it was a good, fast game. Several of the players kept in condition during the Winter by playing indoor polo, and as a result unusual early season form was shown.

The best form was shown by A. C. Smith, J. F. Johnson and E. C. Eastman, each player scoring two goals. No penalties were registered against either team. The teams will practice at Van Cortlandt Park every Monday, Wednesday and Friday, weather permitting. The line-up:

Whites—Captain R. S. Thomas, No. 1; L. J. Hunt, No. 2; E. C. Eastman, No. 3; Lorillard Spencer, back.

Goals—A. C. Smith, (2,) J. F. Johnson, (2,) E. C. Eastman, (2,) L. J. Hunt, R. S. Thomas, E. A. Hurd. Referee—F. Anderson.

FINANCIAL MARKETS

All ordinary market perspective was lost yesterday in the face of the news that the Lusitania, with many Americans aboard, had been torpedoed and sunk. There were rumors of this even before the market opened, but they were not believed then nor were they until the report became so specific that it could no longer be ignored. When at last authentic confirmation came the market became demoralized. For half an hour it was practically in a panic. Then support came which first held the decline in check and then turned prices up vigorously. The close showed heavy losses, but they were much less than the extreme declines which had been recorded before support from many sources reached the market.

This very thing had been threatened, yet the news of it took the market completely by surprise. It had not been believed that it really could be. The worst possible consequences were immediately pictured, and, as is apt to happen under such conditions, conclusions were jumped at. Our note to Germany was thought of, and many were asking what effect this happening would have on our relations with that country. It was felt that much depended upon whether American lives had been lost or not, and that was information which the market did not have. The financial community hoped that none had been, but if did not know and it thought that it therefore lacked one essential fact for forming a judgment as to the probable aftermath. It was made plain at the close of the day that in important banking circles it was not believed that the destruction of this ship would lead to the graver consequences which the market had feared at the height of its own unsettlement.

Only very grave news would have been able to drive the market down as yesterday's was driven, and none was found to question the graveness of the day's happening, even barring the worst of its possible consequences. Such a market movement as this, however, has to be considered, not only in relation to the news which was its immediate cause but also in relation to the market's previous course. It took a sudden shock to concentrate in a single session, in fact, in a single hour, a decline so great but if spread out over a much longer period this decline would not have appeared out of proportion to the recent rise.

First and last the market had risen, taking the average of fifty issues, 14⅝ points from the low of the year to the high on April 30. This rise extended over a little more than two months. At yesterday's low price the general level of quotations had fallen a little less than 7 points, or in effect half of the previous rise. As much of a decline as that is not abnormal. This particular decline was abnormal in the element of the time it occupied, but not in respect to its extent.

Until the course of all market reasoning was torn from its normal channel some substantial reasons were being found for the firmness which prices were showing after their two days of sharp reaction and two days of succeeding moderate recovery. An excellent Government crop report was looked for and, as a matter of fact, though it necessarily failed to exert influence in the confusion of the afternoon's market, the expectations in this regard were more than borne out. The May report promises a crop of Winter wheat even greater than last year's yield. And in another quarter the day brought evidence of the favorable trend of events. That was found in the highly satisfactory response to the public offering of the new issue of Pennsylvania Railroad bonds. Subscriptions to these were coming in at a rate which indicated a large oversubscription of the issue.

LONDON MARKET DULL.

LONDON, May 7.—The money market was not disturbed today by the repayment of £15,000,000 ($75,000,000) Treasury bills which was reinvested in similar bills. Discount rates were quiet.

The stock market opened dull. The principal business was in war loan and colonial issues, but the foreign section was cheered later by the better Far Eastern outlook and Chinese and Japanese bonds recovered from early weakness.

American securities, after a period of dullness, also brightened and the leaders hardened a fraction and closed firm.

Paris Prices Irregular.

PARIS, May 7.—Prices were irregular on the Bourse today. Three per cent. rentes, 72 francs 40 centimes for cash. Exchange on London, 25 francs 57½ centimes.

FINANCIAL NOTES.

Walter Kent, formerly with Ladenburg, Thalmann & Co., has been admitted as a partner in the firm of Gartenlaub & Co., 5 Nassau Street.

The date for the sale of 6 per cent. bonds of the Indian Refining Co. to the Bankers Trust Co. is June 4, and not June 24, as stated yesterday.

DRY GOODS TRADE BETTER.

Fall Bookings Show Gain Compared with Last Year's Figures.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 7.—Marshall Field & Co. in their weekly review of the dry goods trade say:

"The general tone of current dry goods business is encouraging. The cooler weather has had its effect in slowing up retail selling somewhat in the near-by territory, but shipments show a fair increase over those of the same period last year.

"The amount of Fall business that is being booked continues to show gains in comparison with the corresponding business of a year ago.

"Collections are satisfactory, reflecting favorable agricultural conditions."

N. Y. Central's Stock Increase.

ALBANY, May 7.—The New York Central Railroad filed with the Secretary of State today, after approval by the Public Service Commission, its proceedings of the stockholders' meeting on April 20, increasing the capital stock from $300,000,000 to $400,000,000. The corporation tax fee paid to the Secretary of State on the increase was $50,000, the largest fee from a corporation received by this office in some time.

TOPICS IN WALL STREET.

Pandemonium.

The stories that can be told of yesterday's half-hour market following receipt of the Lusitania news probably never have been equaled in all of the odd episodes in stock trading. The panic of 1901 and 1907 saw more serious losses, and the last days preceding war brought a more excited market owing to the tension everywhere, but for odd happenings it will be hard to duplicate yesterday's. The news came out of a clear sky when many stocks were close to the top of a sudden rise, and the downward movement of some of the specialties not only ignored fractions but skipped whole points. It was small wonder that seasoned office managers and floor members lost their heads and made mistakes, especially as the ticker was so far behind the market that quotations were a poor measure of what was happening at the time on the Exchange.

Bankers Disturbed.

Leading bankers who were seen after the confirmation of the Lusitania news had been received said that they feared no direct complications as a result of the loss of a ship on which most of them had made several trips, but that the effect on the public mind could not be ignored, and that they did not think the depression would wear off quickly. As one important authority phrased it, he did not anticipate any unpleasant exchange of notes with Germany over the attack on the Lusitania, which he regarded as within the announced policy of the German Government, but he feared the effect of the next disaster to an American ship, following on the disturbing news of the Lusitania. Another banker saw in the bad market break the result of one bad piece of news following the report of a bad Russian defeat. Wall Street still regards a victory on the part of the Allies as good news and a reverse as bad, on the theory that the struggle can have but one ultimate result, and that German victories but prolong the suffering.

Business Out of Hours.

Even the Curb market caught the fever yesterday, and for about two hours after the close a group of brokers carried on active dealings on arbitrage transactions with San Francisco.

Pennsylvania Bonds Selling.

It was not an auspicious day on which to start selling of $65,000,000 of new Pennsylvania bonds, but bankers handling the matter for the syndicate said that the response to the offering had been very large. Other bond men said that while the incident could not have failed to dull the edge of the market for the new issue, they expected to see the ultimate effect beneficial. They believe that one effect of the disaster will be to make domestic investments popular at the expense of foreign loans to belligerents.

New Westinghouse Bonds.

The Westinghouse Electric & Manufacturing Company will issue early next week a circular describing the new convertible bonds to be offered shareholders for subscription when the company desires to raise fresh funds. The tentative plan announced on Wednesday for the retirement of the old convertibles made it appear that when the time came for new financing stockholders would be given the choice between new common stock and convertible bonds. The authorities have since decided to confine the offering to bonds, reasoning that subscriptions would run heavily to bonds any way. In addition to the attractive speculative possibilities entailed in the fact that the bonds would be a call at par on the stock for the balance of 1915, the convertibles would apparently appeal to buyers more than stock because of the higher yield at the proposed price of 105. This is based, of course, on the supposition that the dividend would be continued at the present rate of 4 per cent. a year while the bonds would, like the old issue, bear interest of 5 per cent.

Varying Values.

Many observers of the market in yesterday's hurlyburly were interested in the course of Amalgamated and Anaconda. Two shares of Anaconda together with $3 in cash and the proceeds of the sale of rights entailed in the disposal of about 250,000 shares of Anaconda stock are to go to each holder of Amalgamated in the dissolution. At the best prices for both there was only about 45 cents per share difference between the quotation for Amalgamated and the market value of its Anaconda and appurtenances. Two shares of Anaconda at the top figure of 35¼ were worth $70.50 and $3 cash brought it up to $75.20, as rights were theoretically worth $1.70 each. At the time these values stood in the market Amalgamated was quoted at $74.75 a share. At the low price of the break two shares of Anaconda with the cash and value of a right were worth $68.16 and Amalgamated at its lowest figure was quoted at $63, a difference of more than $5 a share against Amalgamated. Closing at $68 a share, with Anaconda at $32.50, the difference between Amalgamated and its equivalent in Anaconda and cash was cut down again to $1.25 in favor of the latter.

Chances for Arbitrage Dealings.

When prices were dropping most rapidly there was chance for arbitrage dealings between the floor of the Stock Exchange and the Consolidated Exchange, although it was not learned that the opportunity was availed of. Amalgamated Copper sold no lower than 66 on the Consolidated as compared with 63 on the big board. Union Pacific halted on the little board at 123⅜, in comparison with 122 on the Stock Exchange. The widest difference was in Bethlehem Steel, which reached a low level of 141½ on the Consolidated at a time when it was selling down to 130 further up Broad Street.

CONSOLIDATED EXCHANGE.

Transactions on the Consolidated Exchange reached the heaviest total since July 30 of last year, just before the European war cloud broke. Early in yesterday's session the market was hesitating and irregular, with some spots of special firmness showing. In the afternoon, however, when the report was received that the Lusitania had been torpedoed and sunk off the coast of Ireland, the whole market crumbled under a rush of general selling, which gathered impetus as stop loss orders were uncovered all through the list. Commission house business was on a heavy scale, including the handling of a large number of odd lots.

COTTON DECLINES 39 TO 42 POINTS

News of Lusitania Disaster Demoralized Market, Which Had Opened Steady.

LONG LINES SACRIFICED

Demoralization as a result of the sinking of the Lusitania was pronounced in cotton yesterday, and practically every other feature was overshadowed by this event. Prior to the report of the loss of the steamship, which had on board several prominent cotton men, the market was steady with a good undertone. Another sharp decline in Liverpool was almost disregarded as the trade had begun to have a better appreciation of the weakness which has been so pronounced recently in the English market. The easy tone of Liverpool has resulted from the undoing of some very large straddle transactions which operation involved heavy sales in Liverpool against purchases in New York. For this reason Liverpool has slumped very sharply and the New York market has not responded to the decline.

The overshadowing influence of the Lusitania disaster injected the element of panic into the market at a time when prices were showing considerable steadiness. October was selling around 10.15 and there was a quick break of about 20 points. This was followed by a rally close to the 10c level, but another slump of 25 points or more occurred, which carried prices more than 40 points down from the high level of the session and established a net loss of 39 to 42 points.

An enormous amount of cotton was sold, and practically every old long line that had weathered previous declines was sacrificed. The market took this cotton in surprising quantities, and when one considers the panic which animated the frantic longs, the decline of $2 per bale may be considered trifling.

There are several features to be considered as a result of the sinking of the Cunarder. It ought to have a stimulating effect upon Liverpool after the first flush of demoralization subsides, as English importers may become imbued with the idea that further importations will become difficult. The liquidated position of the market in New York is a strong point in its favor. Further shipments of cotton for delivery on contract are no longer probable, and farmers are likely to stick pretty closely to the program of acreage reduction.

The intosight for the week was placed at 145,308 bales, against 101,632 bales last year. The total for the season was placed at 14,113,000 bales, against 14,234,000 last year. Spinners' takings were placed at 245,000 bales for the week, compared with 226,000 last year.

Southern spot markets, as officially reported, were: Unchanged 13 to 30 decline. The local market for spot cotton was quiet, 20 decline, 9.95 for middling upland.

MINING CONCERN BANKRUPT.

A petition in bankruptcy was filed yesterday against the Seward Dredging Company, 200 Fifth Avenue, by three of its officers, including the President, A. H. Burroughs. Vice President B. N. Duke of the tobacco family presented a claim of $9,676, and Treasurer T. P. Spencer's claim amounted to $1,050. These creditors, it was asserted in court, have other claims against the company.

The company was incorporated in Delaware in May, 1911, as a consolidation of the Nome Mining Company and several smaller concerns of Alaska, which operated placer and dredging claims. It was capitalized at $2,500,000 and had authorized 6 per cent. first mortgage bonds to the amount of $750,000. Most of the bonds, it was said yesterday, are owned by the three creditors who filed the bankruptcy petition.

Both principal and interest of the bonds will be payable in gold without deduction for any tax or taxes which the Railroad Company may be required to pay, or retain therefrom under any present or future laws of the United States or of the State of Pennsylvania, excepting any Federal Income Tax.

SAMUEL REA, Esq., President of The Pennsylvania Railroad Company, in a letter dated May 6, 1915, copies of which may be obtained from the undersigned, writes in part as follows:

"In order to provide for its presently maturing obligations and future requirements, The Pennsylvania Railroad Company is about to execute a mortgage, to secure an issue of bonds to be known as its General Mortgage Bonds, which is to cover, subject to prior liens for the retirement of which General Mortgage Bonds are to be reserved, all the railroad property and leaseholds of The Pennsylvania Railroad Company (excepting certain unimportant leaseholds), including the valuable terminals in Philadelphia, Pittsburgh, Harrisburg and other places in the State of Pennsylvania, and valuable rolling stock, shops and other equipment owned by the Company.

"The proceeds of the $65,000,000 bonds which you have agreed to purchase will provide the Company with the balance of funds necessary to pay off the Convertible Bonds which mature on October 1st, 1915; the other obligations maturing in 1915 and the cost of additions and betterments to its railroad and equipment planned for the balance of this year having already been provided for.

"The authorized total issue of the General Mortgage Bonds will be limited at all times to the then outstanding and paid-up capital stock of the Company, and the mortgage securing these bonds will be in such form and terms as shall be necessary in the opinion of counsel to make the bonds issued thereunder a legal investment for savings banks and life insurance companies under the present laws of the State of New York.

"The Pennsylvania Railroad Company has at present outstanding $499,265,700 Capital Stock, and has uninterruptedly paid dividends on its outstanding stock since 1856, the present dividend being at the rate of 6% per annum.

"The gross income of the Company for the year ended December 31st, 1914, applicable to interest charges, rentals, etc., amounted to $51,792,223, while the aggregate of these fixed charges for the year ended December 31st, 1914, including interest, rentals, etc., amounted to $17,701,458.

"The General Mortgage Bonds are issuable bearing interest at such rate or rates, and with such maturity or maturities, not earlier, however, than the maturity of the General Mortgage bonds now to be issued, as the Board of Directors may from time to time determine.

"Application will be made to list these bonds on the New York Stock Exchange."

The subscription will be closed at three o'clock p. m. on Tuesday, May 11, 1915, or earlier, the right being reserved to reject any applications and to award a smaller amount than applied for. The undersigned reserve the right to close the subscription at any time without notice.

A first payment of $50 per $1,000 bond subscribed for must accompany all subscriptions. The balance of the amount due on bonds allotted upon subscriptions will be payable in New York Funds on Tuesday, June 1, 1915, at the office of the undersigned. Pending the execution of the mortgage and the engraving of the bonds, temporary certificates of the Company will be issued.

If no allotment be made, the first payment will be repaid in full, and if only a portion of the amount applied for be alloted, the balance of the first payment will be applied towards the amount due on Tuesday, June 1, 1915. No interest will be allowed on such first payment. If any further balance remains, such balance will be repaid. Failure to pay the second installment, when due, will render the previous payment liable to forfeiture.

PREDICT NEW RECORD IN WINTER WHEAT

CROP GAINS GENERALLY

Marked Improvement Noted in a Month — Farming Conditions Uniformly Favorable.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—Rapid improvement in the condition of Winter wheat has increased the estimate of the crop by 74,000,000 bushels since the April estimate. The Department of Agriculture today reported an indicated production of 693,000,000 bushels, based on the condition on May 1. That would be 1.3 per cent. more than the record crop of 684,990,000 bushels produced last year.

Estimating on the April 1 condition, the Crop Reporting Board last month calculated that the crop would be 619,000,000 bushels, or 15 bushels an acre. Details of the report, showing conditions as of May 1, follow:

Average condition, 92.9 per cent. of a normal, compared with 88.8 on April 1 last, 95.9 on May 1 last year, and 87.4, the ten-year May 1 average.

The condition is indicative of a yield per acre of approximately 17.3 bushels, assuming average variations to prevail to harvest time. On the estimated area to be harvested, this would produce 693,000,000 bushels. The outturn of the crop will probably be above or below the figures given, according as the change in conditions from May 1 to harvest is above or below the average change.

Rye: Condition, 89.8 per cent. of a normal, compared with 89.5 on April 1 last, 93.4 on May 1 last year, and 90.0, the ten-year May 1 average.

Meadow (hay) lands: Condition, 89.8 per cent. of a normal, compared with 90.9 on May 1 last year, and 88.6, the ten-year May 1 average.

Hay: Stocks of hay on farms May 1 are estimated at 8,468,000 tons, or 12.1 per cent. of last year's crop, against 7,832,000 tons, or 12.2 per cent., on May 1 last year, and 7,969,000 tons, or 11.9 per cent., the five-year average on May 1.

Pastures: Condition, 87.2 per cent. of a normal, against 88.3 on May 1 last year, and 86.4, the ten-year May 1 average.

Spring plowing: Was 78.3 per cent. completed up to May 1, compared with 70.9 on May 1 last year, and 68.0 the ten-year May 1 average.

Spring planting: Was 65.3 per cent. completed up to May 1, compared with 56.4 on May 1 last year, and 54.8, the nine-year May 1 average.

ARGENTINE LOAN ON MAY 15.

Notes for $50,000,000 to Bear That Date, Announces Morgan & Co.

Formal announcement was made yesterday by J. P. Morgan & Co. concerning the $50,000,000 loan to be made to Argentina, of which $25,000,000 will be issued here, as follows:

Messrs. J. P. Morgan & Co., Messrs. Kuhn, Loeb & Co., the National City Bank, and the First National Bank of this city and a group in London headed by Messrs. Baring Brothers, Limited, and Messrs. Morgan, Grenfell & Co., have jointly concluded arrangements with the Argentine Government for the purchase and simultaneous issue in this country and abroad of approximately $50,000,000 of Argentine five-year bonds.

The amount to be issued in this country is $25,000,000 and in London £5,000,000. The bonds will be dated May 15 and will bear interest at 6 per cent. After two years they will be internationalized as between the dollar and sterling issues.

The actual offering of the bonds in this country will be made through a selling syndicate to be announced shortly and to be made up of well known banks and bankers in this and other cities.

This loan has been under negotiation for some weeks and has been permitted by the British Government to be an exception to the prohibition issued against making of any loans of British capital outside Great Britain during the war. This will be the second large loan placed by Argentina in this country since Jan. 1. A group of banks and banking institutions, headed by the National City Bank, bought of the Argentine Government $15,000,000 of 5 per cent. notes about two months ago.

Big Business Helps Missions.

It has often been said that business in foreign lands has owed much to Christian missions in opening up new territory to trade. It now develops that missions will owe something to big business. It has been the custom for the home offices of the foreign missionary societies to pay their representatives in the field by foreign drafts. The war has made this method impossible. The treasurers of the various missionary boards at a joint meeting voted to appeal to some American mercantile house doing business in every part of the world. They decided to ask the Standard Oil Company to become the agent of the mission boards for the transmission of money to their stations in foreign fields, and through its Treasurer the arrangement was speedily made. The readiness of the company in doing this without compensation is indicative of the spirit of co-operation for the common good which underlies our great corporations.—Leslie's.

TYPEWRITER FOR SALE.

Owner Wants to Sell to Somebody Who'll Give It a Good Home.

Typewriters are very human. When they grow old they have to be humored.

I do not mean the pretty typewriters who ride downtown in the eight-two car and run through Bank Street and Clinton Street like wild things to reach the office before 8 o'clock.

Typewriters of that kind never grow old. Their vigorous morning exercise keeps them young.

In the interscholastic track meets the stenography schools are seldom represented. It is a good thing for the prep and high and manual training schools that this is so.

The average graduate of the stenography college can do her hundred yards in ten seconds flat, and come in at the finish as cool and fresh as a Jersey peach—which she generally is around here.

I refer, however, to the typewriter that has keys and a bell; keys that at busy moments stick down like ten-inch spikes and have to be pried up with a pencil at the expense of the pencil point, and a bell that forgets to strike—or, rather, goes on a strike—when you are in a hurry.

A ribbon also this typewriter has; not the headache sort of ribbon that the lady typewriters wear, but an inky one that looks like the flag of the German Empire.

This ribbon belongs to the I. W. W., and works only when it feels the need of a change; so that after you have clicked along for half a page, typing something with especial care for your favorite evening newspaper, you may discover that the ribbon has lain down to rest, feeling that it has run its course and earned a vacation.

In consequence of which indolence on the ribbon's part you have punched a hole through the cloth and written nothing for twenty or thirty lines, and the work is to do over.

Such a typewriter I have before me. I paid $18 for it. The man said it was a reconstructed typewriter.

When I recall that the reconstruction period in our republic was productive of much trouble and unhappiness and bitter feeling, I can understand the poetic fitness of calling this machine a reconstructed one.

Like a political machine, my typewriter will work nicely for you if you happen to know it. If you are acquainted with the devious ins and outs of a political machine, particularly the ins, if you are on good terms with it and do not mind more or less crooked work, you can get along with the machine well enough and even become its enthusiastic defender. So with my typewriter.

But you must humble yourself constantly before the machine. You must know, for instance, that whenever you strike the Capital G, the typewriter will expect you to shift the carriage back to zero, and reach around behind with the middle finger of your left hand, and poke the Cap G lever down into place. Otherwise the machine will go on writing Cap G every time you wish to write a lower case t.

I will now write Capital G and neglecG Go humor Ghe machine. You see Ghe resulG.

On occasions like Ghis I do noG swear aG Ghe machine, as rough wriGers like Jack LLndon and Alfred Henry LLwis mighG do. I push Ghe Cap G back inGo place and Ghank my sGars GhaG CapiGal G is one of Ghe leGGers leasG used.

Another whimsicality of my machine is that it is never satisfied to stop with a single Capital L unless coaxed. I always enjoy writing "LLEWELLYN PARK" on an envelope because my typewriter does its part so cheerfully. It enters into the spirit of the thing, as it were. In fact, it is so willing to give good measure that it will write "LLLLEWELLLLYN" if I do not watch it.

I should state, perhaps, that the carriage band slips off about twice a day and wraps itself six or eight times tightly around the ribbon bar at the back. Also that I dare not write "every" and "even" and "eleven" at top speed, because of a lifelong feud between the e and the v.

Then, too, the spring in the shift lever is worn out, making a rubber band necessary from the lever to the color knob, and this rubber band sometimes moves the color knob over when I am not looking, giving my compositions a gay and frivolous appearance that is very unpleasant when I am trying to convince the printer of my weight and seriousness.

With all its idiosyncracies, however, it is a fine old typewriter and very dear to me. It has helped me to write many charming and interesting things, and I feel genuine regret, now that I am obliged to offer it for sale.

Dr. Osler's theory does not apply to typewriters. Although my machine has celebrated its fortieth birthday it is still strong and active, and I am certain that if some charitable person will buy it and give it a good home and indulge its harmless eccentricities, it will more than repay his kindness. My only reason for parting with it is that my work has become too heavy to ask any machine to perform except a lusty young one in the possession of all its faculties.

OPPOSES WHEAT MONOPOLY

Paris Temps Criticises the Government's Proposals.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 7.—The Temps sharply criticises the Government's reported intention to make a State monopoly of wheat, which, it considers, likely to cause unnecessary alarm throughout the country.

The declared object of the proposal is to prevent undesirable speculation, but the Government announces that the supply is "unquestionably in excess" of any possible demand. "Why, then," asks the Temps, "is a monopoly necessary? Surely an abundant supply is the best preventive of speculation."

COMMODITIES MARKETS

WHEAT.

The sinking of the steamship Lusitania had a disconcerting and almost demoralizing influence on the wheat market, and, while prices failed to show as violent fluctuations as might have occurred earlier in the season, there was heavy selling toward the close of the day and final prices were 1¼c to 2⅝c net lower. The market was heavy most of the day, with more or less liquidation for over the Government report, which was published after the close of the market, and sentiment seemed to lean to the bear side. The Government report made the finest crop prospect in regard to indicated yield ever issued by the department.

In the local cash market No. 2 red Winter wheat was quoted at $1.65 and No. 2 hard at $1.67, cost, insurance, and freight, track; No. 1 Northern Duluth, $1.62⅛, and No. 1 Northern Manitoba, $1.64½, cost, insurance, and freight, Buffalo. Export sales for the day were estimated at 500,000 bushels.

CORN.

The corn market felt the influence of the decline in wheat and prices were lower, closing with net losses of 1 to 1½c. The rains over the West were considered favorable for the crop already planted, but it was feared that further planting would be delayed.

In the local cash market No. 2 yellow corn was quoted at 86c, prompt shipment.

OATS.

The volume of business in the oats market was comparatively small and prices were fairly steady until late in the day, when there was quite active selling on the break in wheat and corn, and final prices were ½ to ⅝c net lower.

The local cash market was easy; standard quoted at 61c; No. 2 white, 61½c; No. 3 white, 60½c; No. 4 white, 60c; fancy clipped white, 61½ to 63c; ordinary clipped white, 60½ to 61½c, all elevator.

PROVISIONS.

The market for hog products was only moderately active, and prices were lower, owing to a decline in the price of live hogs and in sympathy with grain. Receipts of hogs at Chicago were 17,000; estimated for Saturday, 11,000. Kansas City received 4,500 and Omaha 9,000.

COTTONSEED OIL.

Prices in the cottonseed oil market were steadier early in the day, with comparatively little pressure to sell and on moderate covering. Later, however, selling increased on the weakness in lard and cotton, and toward the close the market was weak. Closing quotations were 6 to 13 points net lower.

COTTON.

News of the Lusitania disaster precipitated a sensational break in the cotton market yesterday afternoon. It came toward the close of a day replete with disquieting rumors, which had already placed the market in a very nervous condition, and led to violent unloading, under which active positions declined about 45 points, or nearly $2.50 per bale from levels prevailing early in the day, with final prices only a little up from lowest and 39@42 points below the previous night.

Southern spot markets were unchanged to 30 points lower, Houston showing the maximum decline.

COFFEE.

The coffee market was again narrow and, after showing some weakness at the start and a subsequent rally, prices late in the day were easy under liquidation prompted largely by the demoralized condition of the other commodity markets over the loss of the Lusitania, and at the close values were net unchanged to 5 points lower.

The local spot market was inactive and unchanged, with Rio 7s quoted at 7⅝c.

BUTTER AND EGG MARKET.

BUTTER—Receipts yesterday, 6,220 packages. There was a short supply of high-grade fresh creamery and the market on such was firm. Possibly some of the sales to outside buyers were fractionally higher, but as a rule, receivers pieced the goods out in a manner to supply the pressing needs of regular trade, and there was not much disposition to disturb values. Rather more firsts and seconds offering and tone a little easier. Renovated well sold up and firm. Ladles and packing stock still favor the seller. Creamery, extras, (92 score) 31c; higher scoring, 31½@32c; firsts, 29@30½c; seconds, 27@28½c; thirds, 24@26c; creamery, held, firsts, 26½@27½c; seconds, 25@26c; thirds, 23@24c; State dairy, finest, 30@30½c; good to prime, 28@29c; common to fair, 23@27c; renovated, extras, 23½@24c; firsts, 22½@23c; lower grades, 20@21½c; imitation creamery, firsts, 22@22½c; ladles, current make, firsts, 21½@22c; seconds, 20½@21c; lower grades, 19@20c; packing stock, current make, No. 2, 19½@20c; lower grades, 18@19c.

EGGS.—Receipts yesterday were 22,069 cases. Arrivals are more moderate, and so large a part of the finest stock arriving is going directly to the warehouses that the offerings on the open market consist chiefly of the good, medium, and lower grades, for which values are irregular, showing a wide range, with only a moderate demand. There is considerable call for fancy stock, and such rule firm. Storage room, except for those who have engagements, is becoming scarce. Near-by white eggs of very fancy quality are meeting a fair demand, but only a small part of the supply is good enough to reach top quotation; most of the business in good-sized lots ranges 22@23c. High qualities of near-by brown eggs rule firm. WESTERN PACIFIC BONDS.

Protective Committee, Headed by A. W. Krech, Is Formed.

Announcement was made yesterday that a protective committee for the $50,000,000 Western Pacific Railway first mortgage bonds, on which interest was defaulted on March 1, had been formed. Alvin W. Krech, President of the Equitable Trust Company, is Chairman of the committee. The other members are C. Ledyard Blair of Blair & Co., Star J. Murphy, representing Standard Oil interests; Frederick H. Ecker, William A. Read of William A. Read & Co., William Salomon of William Salomon & Co., Richard B. Young, L. de Bruyn of Adolph Boissevain & Co., Amsterdam, Holland; David R. Forgan of Chicago, and A. M. Hunt, James D. Phelan and George Whittell of San Francisco. John J. O'Leary, 24 Broad Street, is Secretary of the committee.

In a circular the committee asked for deposits of the bonds before June 1 with the Equitable Trust Company, the Old Colony Trust Company of Boston, the Illinois Trust and Savings Bank, Chicago, or the First Federal Trust Company of San Francisco. The circular states that upward of $84,000,000 had been spent on the Western Pacific since the building of the road began. It is pointed out that the road never earned enough to pay the dividend on its first mortgage bonds. The deficit has been supplied from year to year by the Denver & Rio Grande.

A suit to foreclose the mortgage securing the Western Pacific defaulted bonds has been begun by the Equitable Trust Company, as trustees. The committee will now consider the advisability of holding the Denver & Rio Grande responsible for its guarantee of the March 1 interest. By the terms of the indenture, suit cannot be started until six months after any semi-annual interest is defaulted. In this case no court action can be begun before Sept. 1.

Referring to the probability of the purchase of the Western Pacific road by the State of California, the committee says that no news has been received to justify it in assuming that the property will go to the State.

CONDITION OF TRADE.

Commenting on the condition of trade and the business of the banks, Dun's Review says:

Business conditions show comparatively little change, and though the recent cheerful outlook is maintained, conservatism goes hand in hand with increased confidence. The growing intensity of the war operations, including the sinking of an American ship, has caused considerable uneasiness and resulted in rather sharp irregularities in the stock market. The cost of the war, which in one country alone amounts in the first year to more than double the total Government debt created in this country during the civil war, naturally causes concern. This, however, has little or no effect on the immediate volume of trade, which continues to expand slowly. The heavy export demand, particularly of foodstuffs and war materials, is still the most striking feature; but it is noticeable also that domestic consumption is on a rising scale, although this is much more apparent in some directions than in others.

Clearings through the banks this week at the leading cities in the United States were in much greater volume than for a considerable period, amounting to $3,782,106,792, an increase of 25.4 per cent. as compared with the $3,017,263,976 of the same week last year and of 23.3 per cent. as contrasted with the corresponding week in 1913, when the total was $3,066,634,475.

Bradstreet's says:

Undercurrents run in a favorable direction, though trends in certain lines and some sections, affected either by weather conditions or marked dependence on a particular commodity, still lag. But by and large, the outstanding factors indicate that industry has made further progress; steel mills are operating at close to 75 per cent. of capacity; buying of pig iron, helped by speculative purchases, has spread; plants making war supplies are pushed to the utmost; additional export orders of magnitude are pending, and unemployment is decreasing.

Large Order for Duck.

An order just received by the Columbia Mills Company of Columbia, S. C., for 250,000 yards of wide duck cloth weighing two pounds to the yard will occupy that concern for the next three months. The goods will consume about 1,000 bales of cotton and it will take 35 cars to bring the product to this city.

Glove Demand Picks Up.

During the last two weeks there seems to have been a greater inclination on the part of retailers to place their Fall orders for gloves. The manufacturers believe this is a sign that more general movement will follow with the object of replenishing stocks that are known to be low. In some quarters, however, where it would be natural to expect that orders would be more general on account of a manifest improvement in conditions during the last few months, there seems to be no change in the sentiment. An example is given in the backward fashion in which dealers downtown in the Wall Street district are placing their orders.

Insufficient Postage Evil.

So much trouble has been caused by short-paid postage on letters to foreign countries that the Post Office Department has felt it necessary to issue a letter calling attention to the matter, which is said to affect "very unfavorably the natural extension of our foreign trade." The only destinations to which the 2-cent letter rate applies are Canada, Cuba, Mexico, Republic of Panama, the Canal Zone, Bahamas, Barbados, British Honduras, Leeward Island, Newfoundland, Germany, (by direct steamers only,) England, Scotland, Wales, Ireland, and the City of Shanghai, China. To all other places the rate is 5 cents for the first ounce or fraction of an ounce and 3 cents for each additional ounce or fraction. Postage must be fully prepaid, or the letters become liable on delivery to a charge of double the amount of the deficient postage.

Cotton Goods Exports Fair.

While certain goods are moving well at this time, especially duck for commercial purposes, the present export trade in cotton goods can hardly be called more than fair. The situation in the Far East has put at an end any hope there may have been for a revival of China business in the near future, and, while sheetings are still going to the Red Sea districts, the quantities are not so large as they have been. South America is said to be taking narrow sheetings and drills well, but business in prints and other colored cottons is being hampered generally by the scarcity of certain lines, due to the dyestuffs shortage and the higher prices asked. Duck prices are higher also, but the mills are so well sold up on these goods from all accounts that new business is retarded more by the question of deliveries than by the increases asked. War duck shows little feature just now.

Pile Fabrics Are Active.

A nice general business on pile fabrics for the Fall season is reported in this market. Because of the war, the users of these goods will have to depend very largely on the domestic product and, for this reason, it has already been found necessary to make price advances on several lines. Some unusually good imitation fur effects are being put out this year, and the cutters are said to be taking them well for the various garments they make of them. They are also being bought by furriers who make the cheaper classes of goods and who use them for "fur" sets. Corduroys are actively sought for garment purposes, and velveteens are moving well. The demand for plushes is fairly good, but is said to be improving. Velvets are very good and there is every indication of an excellent season for them. They are among the goods which have been advanced in price.

Dress Linens Still Good.

While some slowing up in the demand for colored dress linens is reported in certain quarters of the local market, on the whole there is little fault to be found with the movement of these goods. They are getting scarcer all the time, and prices are firming up as the stocks dwindle. Blue, rose, pink, white, and other Summer shades are in demand, both from the cutting-up trade and the jobbers. A good retail demand for these goods is reported by the latter. Business on household linens is reported to have improved somewhat of late, most of the orders coming from jobbers and calling for delivery late this month or early next. Import business is badly hampered by the high prices asked for forthcoming goods on the other side, and some of the importers are unwilling to try for this business at the present time because of them. Little hope of lower prices later on is held out.

Brassieres Doing Very Well.

An excellent demand for brassieres is told of in this market, with the so-called reducing garment much in demand. Front fastened brassieres are meeting general favor, especially the surplice type. The various V-neck effects are wanted by buyers, as are rounded necks and low-cut effects with shoulder straps of ribbon. Some of the popular models show no shoulder straps at all. For wear with evening gowns, one model is offered which shows a cut in the back clear to the waist line, the cut being somewhat in the shape of a V with a very blunt point. All through the line there is a predominance of trimmings, in which ribbons, laces, and embroideries all share well. Even the cheapest brassieres are much bedecked. While some talk is heard of a revival of the corset covers of several years back, the general opinion in the trade is that, if they do return, they will not come in strongly enough this season to hurt the brassiere business.

Corset Specialties Numerous.

One of the features of the corset business this season is said to be the number of specialties that are being offered, they being made at once to conform to the particular physical needs of prospective wearers and the dictates of fashion. Another thing of interest is the reported tendency in some of the new models toward more fullness at the hips. While the increase in fullness has as yet been small, it is expected to be enlarged as the season advances and to become a definite feature of Fall models. This change in mode is thought to fit in very well with the curving in at the waist line in the present season's models. There is a good sale of unboned corsets for the natural figure type of women, many of them being cut rather low, while the stouter users of these goods are taking models with 4½ to 5½ inch tops. Misses' corsets are active, too, with the tendency toward models which use more boning than has heretofore been customary in these goods.

Gray Goods Buying Falls Off.

Except for rather good buying of sheetings for bag purposes during the early part of the day and good business on the kind of goods that is used in the making of the "athletic" type of Summer underwear for men, the gray goods market was not active yesterday. The Lusitania incident and its depressing effect on the cotton market put both goods, buyers and sellers at sea so far as the spot print-cloth market was concerned, and buying of this merchandise for the nearby deliveries was small. Buyers took advantage of the situation, however, to bid for goods for the later shipments and found some of the mills in a more receptive mood than has been the case of late. Some of them were willing to consider bids on goods wanted for June, July, and August shipment, and business was done for those deliveries at full prices. On the widest of the staple constructions there was a tendency to go further ahead than that in some quarters, and reports were in the market that business had been done on them for delivery in September and October. Leading commission houses quoted spot goods as follows:

Duties Fixed on Watch Fobs, Mesh Bags, and Cod Tongues.

The H. H. Tammen Company, Denver, was sustained yesterday by the Board of General Appraisers in protests against the Collector's assessment on watch fobs imported under the Tariff act of 1909. They were returned for duty at 85 per cent. ad valorem as articles of personal adornment. The importers went before the board with the contention that the fobs are commonly or commercially known as jewelry with duty at the rate of 60 per cent. The board agreed and reversed the Collector.

Snow's United States Sample Express Company imported under the act of 1909 women's mesh bags composed of white metal. Duty was taken at 85 per cent. ad valorem under the personal adornment provision. The board overruled the claim that the goods were properly dutiable at 45 per cent. as manufactures of metal. The Collector was affirmed.

Several protests were filed by Emrich, King & Schorsch. In some of the protests the board held the importers had no ground for action as the claims made for duty were the same as those assessed by the Collector. In other cases the board ruled that protests were made against merchandise not imported. In the latter instance the protests were also overruled.

The Maine Central Railroad Company, acting as forwarder, protested the Collector's assessment on cod tongues and sounds imported under the tariff. Classification was made at the appropriate rates as prepared fish, whereas the importers claimed free entry as fish unprepared. Judge Hay held that there was nothing in the record to offset the presumption in favor of the Collector's classification.

GREENHUT CREDITORS BUSY

Two Committees Will Investigate Bankrupt's Affairs Fully.

The Independent Creditors' Committee of J. E. Greenhut Company, of which William M. Ivins is Chairman, has sent a letter to the creditors in which it has expressed complete satisfaction with the choice of Walter C. Noyes, William A. Marble, and Alfred A. Cook as trustees in bankruptcy. However, it suggests that four matters call for special investigation by the merchandise creditors.

These are the large deposits of cash, which it alleges were made with banks and trust companies, which were heavy creditors of the J. B. Greenhut Company, while the merchandise creditors remained unpaid; the large salaries paid the corporate officers, of which one is said to have been $100,000 and two $50,000 each; the issue of a large amount of second mortgage bonds four years ago for the purchase of real estate from persons connected with the corporation, and the difference between the most recent financial statements given to the mercantile agencies and the showing disclosed by the receivers' report.

These matters Mr. Ivins's committee says will be investigated fully as the Creditors' Protective Committee, of which L. F. Dommerich is Chairman, is also intent on a full inquiry.

Wool Prices Firmer.

LONDON, May 7.—A good selection amounting to 9,060 bales was offered at the wool auction sales today. The smaller catalogues stimulated the demand, and the best grades of merino hardened. Queensland scoured realized 2s 5d, New South Wales scoured, 2s 3½d, and the others were firm.

ST. GALL EMBROIDERIES.

Another Commission Is Appointed to Take Up the Matter.

It was announced yesterday that the new Federal Commission to re-investigate Swiss embroidery market prices for the purpose of fixing accurate duties will meet in Washington next Tuesday for a conference with Secretary McAdoo, Assistant Secretary Peters, and other officials of the Treasury Department. This commission, which, it is expected, will be charged with reviewing the work performed a year and a half ago by the so-called Wheatley Commission that was sent abroad to look into St. Gall values.

The commission consists of Judge Hay of the Board of General Appraisers, John K. Sague, Appraiser of the Port, and Assistant Chief of the Customs Division Ashworth. Appraiser Sague said yesterday that the plans for the latest investigation would probably be formulated at next week's conference in Washington. It is presumed that the commission will eventually go to St. Gall in order to investigate the embroidery industry at first hand.

The price at which Swiss embroideries should be allowed to enter this country, for dutiable purposes, has been a controverted one for nearly a quarter of a century. About twenty years ago George W. Whitehead, then a Special Agent of the Treasury Department, conducted an inquiry at the Swiss centre, and devised the so-called stitch-rate method of basing duties. Karl Kaufman, himself a manufacturer at St. Gall, was appointed a special representative of the United States to supervise shipments to this country. For some years there was little friction over the values at which the goods were being valued, but in 1913 difficulties again arose resulting in Mr. Kaufman's resignation.

The Wheatley Commission was then appointed and went to St. Gall, where it was reported clashes occurred between the members and the manufacturers. When the commission returned and filed its report it was said drastic recommendations were made which the Treasury Department seemed unwilling to adopt. At any rate, the report was never made public. Some surprise is caused in importing circles at the naming of another commission at this time in view of the disturbed conditions in Switzerland as a result of the war.

THE WEATHER.

WASHINGTON, May 7.—The Middle West disturbance of Thursday night has moved almost due northward to Northern Lake Superior with greatly increased intensity, leaving a small secondary disturbance over Southern Alabama. No high pressure follows this disturbance and another disturbance of pronounced character has appeared over British Columbia. Pressure is also low over the east portion of the country, but high over the ocean.

Precipitation area from the Middle West disturbance during the last twenty-four hours covered the entire eastern half of the country, with heavy rains in the Ohio Valley, Tennessee, and the East Gulf States, but during Friday the weather cleared generally in the central valleys. In the West the weather was generally fair.

It is considerably warmer in the lower Missouri Valley, the Plains States, and the central Rocky Mountain region, and high temperature continue in the north plateau. In the South Atlantic and East Gulf States it is temporarily cooler, owing to thunder storms.

Except for local rains Saturday in the New England and Northern New York and showers along the South Atlantic Coast, the weather will be generally fair Saturday and Sunday over the entire Northwest.

It will be warmer Saturday in the Northwest and Central West, and on Sunday in the central valleys and the upper lake region. It will be somewhat cooler Saturday in the Middle Atlantic States.

Storm warnings are displayed on the Great Lakes and on the Atlantic Coast from Delaware Breakwater to Boston.

Winds for Saturday and Sunday along the North Atlantic Coast will be fresh to strong south and southwest; Middle Atlantic Coast, fresh to strong southwest; South Atlantic Coast, moderate to fresh, mostly south.

THE REAL ESTATE FIELD

American Real Estate Company Buys 1,150 Lots in Queens for Immediate Improvement—Hotel Walton on Columbus Avenue Sold—Butterfield Estate Resale on Twelfth Street—Suburban Market.

The big feature in the realty market yesterday was the announcement that the American Real Estate Company had purchased a tract of 1,150 lots in the Steinway section of Queens Borough and is planning an immediate development of the property. It is the largest deal of the kind of well situated property close to the Manhattan business centre that has been made in some time, and the entry of the American Real Estate Company as prominent developers of Queens property indicates the great confidence of the operators in the future of that rapidly growing borough.

For the last twenty-five years the buyers have been active developers in Manhattan, Bronx, and Westchester County, and their selection of Queens for building operations on a large scale is certain to exert a marked influence in the realty market there, both from a residential and business standpoint.

The property purchased comprises the Kouwenhoven estate, situated between Steinway and Fourth Avenues, with frontages on Flushing, Woolsey, Potter, Ditmars, and Wolcott, Fourth, Sixth, Seventh, Eighth, and Ninth Avenues. It is a short distance from the East River near Hell Gate, and will be served by various lines of transit, of which the most important is the new Astoria branch of the Subway, with a station at Ditmars Avenue, and an express station at Hoyt Avenue within a block of the Flushing Avenue frontage of the property.

The elevated structure of the Subway extension is already erected along Second Avenue to the property, and a connection is now being constructed on Jackson Avenue and at the Bridge Plaza. It is expected that trains will be operated through the Steinway Tube by June 15, and that trains over the Queensboro Bridge will be running by the early part of next year.

The American Real Estate Company intends to begin at once the development of the property by erecting apartment houses for employes of neighboring factories and workers in Manhattan. The company proposes to do in Queens what it has done successfully in the Bronx.

E. B. Boynton, President of the company, expresses his belief, as the result of his study of business conditions, that the tide has turned, good times are ahead, and that this is the psychological time to begin constructive action in real estate operation and investment.

The purchasers intend to improve these plots immediately with twenty-five high class two-family dwellings and two three-family dwellings.

LOST HER POISE ONLY ONCE

Then She Admitted Watching Husband Through Window from Which Woman Was Shot.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., May 7.—Mrs. Florence C. Carman lost the self-control which she had maintained since she was first put on trial for killing Mrs. Bailey, while she was being cross-examined as a witness here today by District Attorney Smith. Mr. Smith was questioning her about the day in April, previous to the shooting of Mrs. Bailey, when Mrs. Carman spied on Dr. Carman and Mrs. Elizabeth Varriance, a nurse, from the same window in the doctor's office, through which it is contended the shot was fired that killed Mrs. Bailey in June.

"And you wanted to go around and see what Dr. Carman and Mrs. Varriance were doing in the office, didn't you?" Mr. Smith asked the defendant, sharply.

"Yes, I did," she replied.

"And that is the same window through which the shot was fired that killed Mrs. Bailey, isn't it?" the District Attorney asked.

"That's the window that was broken," said Mrs. Carman.

"Isn't that the window through which the shot was fired?"

"I don't know," exclaimed the witness, reddening and beginning to tremble.

Mrs. Carman Confused on the Stand.

"Well, that's the window through which you looked!" declared Mr. Smith, bending over the railing toward the witness.

"Which time?" Mrs. Carman responded without the deliberation that had preceded most of her answers.

Mrs. Carman was trembling now so that it could be noticed at the sides of the court room. She began to stammer a reply to the effect that she had not looked twice and then thrust her body forward over the witness stand and pointing her white gloved finger at Mr. Smith, said in a loud voice:

"But believe me, if I had done it I never would have gone to the same window."

It was the first time she had raised her voice on the stand. Before she had spoken in such low tones that the lawyers had to urge her to speak louder so that the jury might hear. The outburst left her red and nervous. Mr. Smith did not pursue the attack, however, and Mrs. Carman speedily regained her composure under a series of questions about the Varriance incident and other points.

After leaving the stand Mrs. Carman resumed her seat at the counsel table within sight of the twelve jurors. The table is flat against the jury box and Mrs. Carman could touch Juror No. 6 without moving from her seat. For a few minutes she chatted and was seen to smile, then she took what appeared to be a bottle of smelling salts from her satchel. Mr. Levy, her lawyer, asked Justice Blackmar to excuse a slight delay while he arranged his papers and Mrs. Carman put her handkerchief to her eyes. The jury, idle during the delay, gazed at her, and when she removed the handkerchief it could be seen that her eyes were red.

Defense Ignores Bribery Charge.

The defense closed its case without bringing to the witness stand the man who was charged with having tried to bribe Celia Coleman, the negro servant, to change her story so as to make it favor Mrs. Carman. One of the witnesses for the defense admitted in the afternoon that this man, known as George Hicks and Owens, a negro detective who was in the employ of the Burns Detective Agency last Summer and had charge of the colored maid, was in the Court House during the day. He was employed by the Carman lawyers to follow Celia Coleman to Charleston, S. C., after the first trial.

George M. Levy, Mrs. Carman's present trial lawyer, placed the responsibility for whatever instructions Hicks received on the shoulders of Surrogate John J. Graham, Mrs. Carman's lawyer at the first trial, when he was examining Mrs. Carman yesterday, and said Mr. Graham was in Atlantic City now.

Dr. Edwin Carman, Mrs. Carman's husband, testified yesterday morning and repeated the same story he told at the first trial. On his cross-examination Dr. Carman admitted that he had stopped the authorities from examining his record books in their search for the names of the two women who fled from his waiting room after the shot had been fired. A detective told him to do this, he said.

Mr. Smith also questioned Dr. Carman about a woman to whom he referred as "Hazel Eyes," and asked if Dr. Carman had not told Mrs. Varriance since the first trial that Mrs. Carman mistook Mrs. Varriance for "Hazel Eyes" when she spied on her in April of 1914 from the office window. Mr. Levy's objection to the question was she had not told Dr. Carman or anybody else about it. He said also that two days later he had told the District Attorney that he did not remember whether Mrs. Carman had told him of it.

Ferdinand Q. Morton, a negro lawyer, who examined Celia Coleman while she was being detained as a witness for the State, was very nervous under Mr. Smith's questions. A copy of the questions and answers at his examination of the colored maid fell into the hands of the defense, and it was by the defense that he was called as a witness. Mr. Levy objected when Mr. Smith asked Morton if it was not true that, after making the examination and failing to get any more information from Celia Coleman than she had given at the Coroner's inquest, he said that he did not believe she was telling the truth.

Saw a Man Run from Carman Place.

Rudolph Loewe, a baker of Freeport, who testified at the first trial, told again yesterday of having heard a shot on the night of June 30, of having seen a man run across the Carman lawn and jump the picket fence separating it from the Black lawn, adjoining. Mr. Loewe, however, was so deaf that both Mr. Levy and Mr. Smith had to stand beside the witness chair and shout the questions into his ear to make him hear them, and then he frequently got his answers mixed.

Mr. Levy then called Walter B. Cousins, a special policeman of Freeport, who had already testified for the prosecution. Mr. Smith in cross-examination asked him if Mrs. Carman's father had said anything to him when he reached the Carman home on the night of the shooting.

"He said, 'Keep this as quiet as possible,'" answered the witness.

Mr. Levy protested against the admission of the statement, and took exception to Justice Blackmar's action in overruling him. Mr. Cousins then said, in answer to more questions from Mr. Smith, that the record of the shooting which he left that night at Police Headquarters was not copied on the blotter the next day by the day man, Policeman John Dunbar, who appeared as a witness for the defense today.

Many Women at the Trial.

The courtroom was crowded in the afternoon with well-dressed women. It was reported that Mrs. Carman would testify during the afternoon, and the rules that had been established at the beginning of the second trial barring all but those who had business in the room were relaxed. Mrs. Carman was called to the witness chair at 3:15 o'clock and finished her direct testimony, in which she told the same story she had told at the first trial, at 3:52 o'clock. She was dressed in a blue tailored suit, with a white linen collar, and wore long white gloves and a light blue straw hat. Her narration of the things she did on the day of the murder seemed to lack some of the dramatic interest it contained at the first trial. But her own lawyer brought out the unexpected disclosure that there was an automatic revolver in her bedroom at the time of the shooting. Its calibre was not the same as that of the bullet found in Mrs. Bailey's body.

Mrs. Carman had said she never fired a revolver in her life, when Mr. Levy asked if there was one in her room when Mrs. Bailey was shot.

"Yes," she replied quite promptly.

Mr. Levy produced a weapon and the witness identified it as the one that, she said, was in a drawer of the chiffonier beside her bed at that time. She denied having authorized Hicks to bribe Celia Coleman to alter her story, but later, under cross-examination, said that she put her lawyers in complete charge of her case. She said in answer to questions put by Mr. Levy that it was Mr. Graham who sent Hicks South to visit Celia Coleman after Hicks had said that he was instrumental in having her change her first story and that he thought he could get her to tell "the truth."

Mrs. Carman acknowledged under cross-examination that she had been suspicious of her husband for about a year before the murder, and on being pressed for a reason for not asking Dr. Carman about his actions, said:

"I believe there is no man who would tell the truth to his wife about his relations with women."

James E. Stiles of The Nassau Post, a newspaper published in Freeport, was called as a witness by the prosecution to testify that he had jumped over the fence between the Carman and the Black lawns after the shooting and had broken a picket in the fence. The defense has attached great importance to the broken picket. Mr. Levy suggested that the jury should be taken to view the Carman house and grounds, but the Justice would not agree to this.

The attorneys for both sides will sum up today, and after Justice Blackmar's charge the case will go to the jury, probably early this afternoon. The feeling among those who have followed the proceedings is that the second trial will result in another disagreement. The first jury stood ten for acquittal and two for conviction.

Special to The New York Times.

PATERSON, N. J., May 7.—One hundred officers of the First Brigade, National Guard, left the Fifth Regiment Armory here this morning for a ninety-mile ride, which will take them to New City, N. Y. They will pitch camp for a few hours there, and on Sunday will leave for the return trip to Paterson. The following officers of the Fifth Regiment, under the command of General Edwin Hine, are taking part: Chief of Staff, Major Alexander Grey; Brig. Quartermaster Harry A. Harris, Major J. T. Wyckoff, Lieutenant John Hinchliffe, Colonel Van Walraven, Lieutenant W. A. Casmus, Major Nolan, Major Loveland, Adjutant William M. Lord, Quartermaster John Malcolm, and Captain Lawrence Behm.

SAID STEEL CO. BACKED THEM

Postal Inspectors Find Plant for Making $595 Cars Is a Shed with One Tool Box.

Under the charge of using the mails to defraud, William J. Bailey, head of the Carnegie Engineering Corporation of 17 Battery Place, and Chauncey Holt, Jr., Secretary of the Chauncey Holt Company, printers at 27 West Seventeenth Street, were arrested yesterday after an investigation by Post Office Inspectors and detectives. According to Detective Hagen, the operations of the concern extended throughout the United States and into Europe, Africa, Australia, and South America, and involved receipts of $750,000. Hagen said the Russian Government had been in communication with the Carnegie Engineering Company regarding the purchase of a big consignment of automobiles.

The Government tauthorities asserted that the corporation sent circulars to practically all parts of the world, advertising a new automobile to be sold for $595, and to be delivered, free on board, Pittsburgh, Penn., on Sept. 1; advance orders would be accepted on deposit of $50 for each car, and, according to Hagen, some 15,000 orders were received. The cause of complaint against the corporation is the charge of Post Office inspector Hugh McQuillan that the factory of the corporation advertised at Kalamazaa, Mich., consistf of an abandoned sawmill, and its furnishings of a single box of tools. Though represented to have a capital of $1,000,000, the corporation, according to the Post Office authorities, seemed to have no assets evcept a suite of offices and stationery and equipment capable of keeping three stenographers busy.

Used Name of Carnegie Steel Co.

The circulars advertised the concern as having the backing of the Carnegie Steel Company, and went on to state: "Why say more? The name of Carnegie is known the world over."

According to Hagen the Carnegie Steel Company knows nothing about the corporation and never backed it, nor did any of the other steel concerns of Pittsburgh have knowledge of the New York company, though the detective says he visited Pittsburgh and made extensive inquiries.

The complaint against Bailey and Holt charges that the conspiracy to use the mails to defraud was entered into on July 21, in this city, and Assistant United States District Attorney Edwin M. Stanton said yesterday he had received more than a dozen complaints against the corporation. One of these came from William Lansford, Postmaster and proprietor of a general store in Palmisto, N. D. He notified Mr. Stanton that on April 15, in reply to a glowing prospectus from the Carnegie Engineering Corporation, he had sent his check for $50 as deposit on twenty-five cars. Then he had become suspicious. Mr. Stanton started the investigation which resulted in the arrests yesterday.

Two Arrested in Kalamazoo.

McQuillan went to Kalamazoo and, according to Detective Hagen, he reported by telegraph yesterday that he had found the factory to be practically nothing but a shed and had arrested two men whom he found there. Two men, not publicly identified, were mentioned in the charges against Bailey and Holt as having acted in concert with them. Meantime Hagen had finished his investigations in Pittsburgh, and yesterday Mr. Bailey and Mr. Holt were invited to the Federal Building, where they were arrested and taken before Commissioner Houghton. On the request of Mr. Stanton he held them for examination on May 14, fixing Bailey's bail at $5,000 and Holt's at $3,500, and he said. "My brother has been drawn into this affair in which he is entirely innocent of any wrong doing or wrong intent, and I expect we shall have no trouble in showing this. As far as I know, now, however, nothing like three-quarters of a million is involved in the case. Why, my understanding was that only $3,000 had been received by the corporation in response to its advertisements, and it is by no means certain yet that the depositors of this sum will not receive their cars at the scheduled time.

Lawyer Denies Frank Charge.

"My brother is a printer, and his first acquaintance with Mr. Bailey came when the latter brought him an order for printing. They grew friendly, and Mr. Bailey talked his business over freely with my brother, suggested that he come in as sales manager. My brother had this under consideration as he has had it under consideration for months, but he had not affiliated himself with the company, was not an officer of it and never received a cent of salary. Why it is a fact that his whole printing bill has not been paid as yet.

"It was carelessness that brought him into the case at all. He believed in Mr. Bailey and, so far as I know, may now have no reason to disbelieve in his honesty. He conceived it quite likely that he would join the enterprise when it was on a surer footing and he failed to protest, therefore, when he noted some time ago that his name had been used on circulars as Sales Manager. He expected to hold this office soon, anyway, and while he thought it a little unbusinesslike did not object to this premature use of his name."

Mr. Holt said that so far as he knew the corporation might be in a position to deliver cars when it had advertised to do so, in which case he could not see how the case against Mr. Bailey and his brother could fail to fall down.

According to Mr. Stanton, the circulars represented that the corporation had better facilities than any other in the world for manufacturing automobiles, that it was closely associated with the steel industry and was known for its soundness throughout the world, and that besides automobiles it manufactured the Carnegie tractor, the Carnegie sharper and planer, the Carnegie industrial locomotive, the Carnegie wire rop, and the Carnegie steel well-drilling machine.

As a matter of fact, says Mr. Stanton, the company in its year of existence has built just one steel well-drilling machine, and that in an outside factory. According to the assistant prosecutor, Bailey's plan was to have various parts of an automobile made in different factories and then to assemble them in the Kalamazoo sawmill.

Bailey, according to the police, is President and Treasurer of the American Hardware and Machinery Export Corporation, which shares offices with the Carnegie Corporation, but the former corporation is not concerned in the present charges. Bailey is married and lives at Middletown, N. Y. Both he and Holt are 35 years old.

ARREST 4 IN STRIKE ROW.

SUMMIT, N. J., May 7.—Guns, pistols, blackjacks, and clubs played a prominent part in a riot that started within a block of the Summit silk mill here this afternoon. Before the mêlée was ended four of the combatants were under arrest.

For the last seven weeks there has been a strike at the mill, and strikebreakers have been imported. Prominent men of the town have been trying to settle the strike, but have failed.

The trouble today occurred, it is said, when one of the strikebreakers struck a little boy who was playing ball near the mill. He ran home crying, and immediately the streets were swarming with strikers, their wives, and sympathizers. They attacked the strikebreakers and several shots were fired before the police arrived. No one was injured.

FOREST HILLS INN

FOREST HILLS, LONG ISLAND.

"The tips, Madam, are guaranteed to outwear the gloves"

"You will find this guarantee in every pair of Kayser Silk Gloves.

"They are the best gloves we can find for our customers because they are so well made and their quality is always the same. Our customers find that Kayser Silk Gloves fit so well that they wear much longer—not only the tips but every part of the Glove.

"Yes, Madam, the name 'Kayser' is in the hem in every pair and you can make no mistake in buying Kayser Silk Gloves."

Kayser Silk Gloves cost no more than the ordinary kind; two clasp gloves are always 50c, 75c, $1.00, $1.25 and up; twelve and sixteen button lengths are always 75c, $1.00, $1.25, $1.50 and up. The name Kayser is in the hem and with each pair is a guarantee ticket that the tips will outwear the gloves.

Conspicuous nose pores

How to reduce them

In such cases the small muscular fibres of the nose have become weakened and do not keep the pores closed as they should be. Instead these pores collect dirt, clog up and become enlarged.

To reduce these enlarged pores: Wring a cloth from very hot water, lather it with Woodbury's Facial Soap, then hold it to your face. When the heat has expanded the pores, rub in very gently a fresh lather of Woodbury's. Repeat this hot water and lather application several times, stopping at once if your nose feels sensitive. Then finish by rubbing the nose for a few minutes with a lump of ice.

Woodbury's Facial Soap cleanses the pores. This treatment with it strengthens the muscular fibres so they can contract properly. But do not expect to change in a week a condition resulting from years of neglect. Use this treatment persistently. It will gradually reduce the enlarged pores until they are inconspicuous.

Do this today! A 25c cake of Woodbury's Facial Soap is sufficient for a month or six weeks of this treatment. Go to your druggist or toilet counter today and get a cake. Begin at once to get the benefits of this treatment for your skin.

Woodbury's Facial Soap is for sale by every dealer and druggist in Greater New York, and, in fact, by dealers everywhere throughout the United States and Canada. Made by The Andrew Jergens Co., New York and Cincinnati.

Is Your Refrigerator Like This

BOHN SYPHON REFRIGERATOR

Condensing moisture transmits flavors. It also deposits germs from the air and ice and rots the food. The Syphon System keeps the air dry—so dry that you can strike sulphur matches on any inside wall of a Bohn Refrigerator. A uniform temperature of 40° is maintained, guaranteed to be 10° colder than any other refrigerator made.

Practically every Refrigerator car and dining car in the land is equipped with the Bohn Syphon. The car builders know. The Refrigerators for home use are built on exactly the same principle.

The "Flaxlinum" Insulation, which makes possible the world-famous Bohn Refrigerator cars, is used also in every Bohn Refrigerator for home use. It's the greatest heat-resisting lining ever made.

Call and see our large line, in both wood and white porcelain. Some of the best styles, including the one illustrated above, are now marked at attractive prices.

We can sell you a Bohn from $16 up. If you cannot call, write for our handsome catalog. We are the mfrs., not middlemen.

FEW OF LINER'S 1200 VICTIMS FOUND; 100 AMERICANS DEAD; TWO SUBMARINES MAY HAVE ATTACKED THE LUSITANIA; PRESIDENT SEES NEED OF FIRM AND DELIBERATE ACTION

WARNING SAVED A FEW

Some First Listed Did Not Sail—Two French and One American Liner Start for Danger Zone.

The latest estimate of lives lost as a result of the torpedoing of the Cunard liner Lusitania by a German submarine off the Irish coast yesterday is 1,189. It is believed that almost all, if not all, the survivors have been brought ashore, and there is little hope of recovering any other passengers alive.

Of the dead many are women. The stories from Queenstown describe the bringing in of the bodies of a great number of women, many of them still unidentified. The Queenstown docks are the temporary resting places also of the bodies of several children. One dead mother is still clasping in her rigid arms the body of her three-months-old baby.

When the Lusitania left New York May 1 she had on board 1,901 souls, 1,251 passengers and 650 crew. The passengers were made up of 291 in the first cabin, 599 in the second, and 361 in the steerage. The list of survivors shows so far that about 90 first-class and 75 second-class passengers were saved.

The first cabin passengers were at lunch when they heralded German attack sent the liner to the bottom. It is noticeable that comparatively few first-class passengers were saved.

The body of Charles Frohman, the theatrical manager, has been recovered and taken to Queenstown, where it is now being embalmed. It was found in one of the improvised morgues of Queenstown this afternoon.

In these morgues there are 147 other bodies awaiting identification.

Among the well-known Americans whose bodies have not been recovered, and who consequently are believed to have perished, are Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Charles Klein, the playwright; Justus M. Forman, and Elbert Hubbard and his wife.

The belief that Mr. Vanderbilt perished when the Lusitania went down was expressed in a message to Ambassador Page from the United States Consul at Queenstown.

Judging from the recitals of survivors, there was comparatively little panic on board the Lusitania when she went down. Nor is there anyhting to show that the rule of the sea favoring women and children in the work of rescue was violated. Many of the liner's lifeboats were rendered useless by the fact that she listed so sharply that they could not be used.

Many of the passengers did not believe the Lusitania would sink as quickly as she did. Consequently they did not join in the rush for the lifeboats, but evidently preferred to trust in their belief that the watertight compartments of the vessel would keep her afloat until such time as help came out from the Irish shore, less than ten miles away. It is related that some of the passengers even disdained to put on lifeboats when these were handed to them.

It is estimated that there were 188 Americans on board the Cunard liner. So far as could be ascertained at this time fewer than seventy Americans were saved. Consequently the dath list of Amricans is about 120. Of these it is believed that at least 50 were New Yorkers.

HIT BY THREE TORPEDOES

So Say Several Survivors Adding Ship Was Struck on Both Sides.

CAPTAIN TURNER IS SILENT

NO PANIC ON DOOMED CRAFT

QUEENSTOWN A BIG MORGUE

LONDON, Sunday, May 9.—From the scattered reports that reach here from many sources these points seem to be established in regard to the sinking of the Lusitania:

No warning of the attack was given.

Several torpedoes were hurled at the ship; some say four and others seven.

Two or at most three of the torpedoes struck the Lusitania.

Conflicting reports as to the side struck suggest that more than one submarine may have participated.

There was no panic on the vessel, the crew going coolly about the work of preparing to save passengers.

Captain Turner promptly turned the Lusitania toward shore.

The heavy list due to inrushing water prevented the launching of many lifeboats.

Some boats were swamped after launching, the vessel being unable to slow up because of severed pipes.

Many passengers, expecting rescue by boats, put on no lifebelts, and perished.

Others on board, including members of the crew, were wounded or killed by the torpedoes.

The ship, sinking rapidly by the head, went down with stern in air ten or fifteen minutes after she was struck.

Capt. Turner, Shaken, Is Silent.

These are just the vague outlines of the great disaster of which no adequate account is yet available.

Captain Turner, commander of the Lusitania, one of the few officers saved, has refused so far to make any formal statement. He remained at his post on the bridge until the ship went down, and was rescued two hours later, wearing a life belt.

He was terribly broken down when he landed at Queenstown Friday evening, but his first remark as he went ashore was one of quiet irony.

"Well," he said, "it is the fortune of war."

After a strong cup of tea and a short rest he seemed to recover from his depression.

He secluded himself during the night in apartments over the Town Bank—but was able to be about in Queenstown in uniform yesterday.

He displayed great grief over the loss of his vessel, but expressed no opinion on the action of the Germans.

Seamen Saw His Arm Appear.

After remaining on the Lusitania's bridge until the structure was submerged, Captain Turner climbed up a ladder, as would a diver from a tank.

When he reached the surface he grasped an oar and then a chair. He clung to the chair for nearly two hours, and finally when the chair turned over, he flung up a gold-braided arm. This was seen by a member of the crew in one of the boats, and thus the commander was saved.

The various craft that went out from Queenstown, Kinsale, and other points along shore Friday afternoon returned to Queenstown during the night and early yesterday morning. All of them brought survivors in greater or lesser number.

Other boats which put out yesterday brought in mostly bodies picked up from the water at the scene of the disaster.

An uncounted number of those brought to land by rescue craft died afterward from their hurts or from exposure, so that at a late hour last night there were lying in temporary morgues, hotels, and even private houses in Queenstown, 159 bodies of victims, a large number of these being women and children.

Cannot Tell Coherent Stories.

Most of the survivors are still bewildered from their terrible experience, and their accounts of the sinking of the Lusitania are not entirely clear. One and all, however, unite in eulogizing the manner in which the ship's officers behaved.

Five minutes after the Lusitania was hit with the second torpedo amidships she had listed so perilously to starboard, according to one account, that all but two boats on the port side were jammed.

The work of getting as many people as possible, for the most part women and children, into the only boats that could be got clear, was at once undertaken by the Captain, officers, and men of the Lusitania.

The first boat launched was almost filled with children, with whom were a few women. It capsized as it struck the water, and all were swept away, although two stokers gave their lives in attempting to save some of them.

Practically all of the first cabin passengers aboard the Lusitania perished. This heavy loss of life is believed to have been due to the calmness they displayed in the face of danger.

Most of them were at luncheon when the steamer received her death blow, and they declined to join the rush for the boats and life belts. They believed that the Cunarder would remain afloat until assistance could arrive.

The loss of life caused by the torpedoes themselves and the explosions they caused must have been heavy. The number of bodies brought into Queenstown afterward bore evidence of the havoc wrought by the submarine's missiles.

Many passengers owed their rescue to life belts, which kept them afloat until they were picked up by boats.

Heart-Rending "Good-Byes."

The scene as the big liner sank beneath the waves is described by the survivors as heart-rending beyond words.

Battling for life, the passengers called to relatives and friends or bade each other good-bye.

The small boats which had got away from the side of the liner picked up a good many survivors, who, with life belts or clinging to wreckage, were floating on the surface of the water. But soon the boats were all crowded. These boats were in turn picked up by rescuing steamers, coming at full speed from shore points, but in many cases four and more hours elapsed before the rescuers reached the scene. In many cases the only work left for the rescue workers to do was to collect from the water the floating bodies of the dead. Several passengers were taken aboard trawlers so much injured that they died before they could reach shore.

A considerable proportion of those brought into Queenstown were members of the crew. These included Captain Turner, with the first and second officers. All the other officers are believed to have perished. One hundred and seventeen stewards and stewardesses of the ship's complement were saved.

There is no evidence, however, that the time honored rule of the sea, "women and children first," was not observed to the last. Ernest Cowper, a Toronto newspaper man, has paid tribute to the discipline of the crew.

On Watch for the Raiders.

Apparently, every precaution had been taken by the officers against a surprise attack by a submarine. Lookouts were constantly on the alert as the giant steamship speeded toward the Irish Coast.

The lookouts sighted the periscope of a submarine a thousand yards away, and the next instant they saw the trail left by a torpedo as it flashed on its course. Then came a terrific crash as the missile pierced the liner's side, followed almost immediately by another which littered the decks with wreckage.

Officers of the ship are quoted as saying that two other torpedoes were fired, but missed the ship. Another account says seven were shot at the Lusitania.

There was indescribable con-

President Calmly Considering His Course; Deliberation and Firmness Are Expected

WASHINGTON, May 8.—After a conference with the President at the White House this evening, Secretary Tumulty said:

"Of course the President feels the distress and the gravity of the situation to the utmost, and is considering very earnestly, but very calmly, the right course of action to pursue. He knows that the people of the country wish and expect him to act with deliberation as well as with firmness."

Secretary of War Thinks It Best to Remain at Capital—Emphasize Gulflight Case.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—That President Wilson appreciates the gravity of the situation confronting the United States by the killing of American citizens through the sinking of the Lusitania by a German submarine was shown by the statement made by Secretary Tumulty at the White House tonight after a conference with the President, in which he said Mr. Wilson was considering very earnestly, but very calmly, the right course of action to pursue.

Until this was issued no word had come from any authoritative source in the Administration to indicate how the President and his advisers viewed the Lusitania tragedy. The President himself was inaccessible. He had seen no member of his Cabinet, nor had he shown a disposition to send a message to the country. He had gone golfing in the morning and motoring in the afternoon, following his usual Saturday practice.

"I am a schoolmaster, you know," he said once, "and I take a holiday on Saturday. "But what he did today was construed here as not having been done so much for recreation as to set an example to the country; to indicate that if the head of the nation was able to go about his affairs without excitement the rest of his fellow-citizens should do the same.

No Congress Call.

There is to be no extra session of Congress—at least THE TIMES correspondent has authority for the statement that the matter of calling Congress, the sole war-declaring power, to meet in Washington now, or in the immediate future, has not even been considered at the White House. Nor is it true, as reported this evening, that the President will call a special meeting of the Cabinet before Tuesday, the regular Cabinet meeting day.

It was said at the White House tonight, and officials seemed anxious to make the fact known, that the President had changed none of his plans on account of the Lusitania incident. He will keep his engagements to visit Philadelpia on Monday evening to address a meeting of newly naturalized foreign-born citizens, and he will adhere to his itinerary for his visit to New York to attend the review of the Atlantic Fleet week after next.

Ever since he received the news of the disaster the President has acted in a way to show a desire to encourage the country to be calm and to trust to his judgment as to the best course to pursue. He has had no conference with Secretary Bryan, who said today that he had not seen the President nor communicated with him, directly or indirectly, "by wire or wireless." The quoted words are Mr. Bryan's.

All the members of the Cabinet, while they were obviously grave, declined to discuss the Lusitania disaster or its possible effect on the relations of the United States with Germany. The only significant incident in connection with the way in which the Cabinet circle bore itself was the action of Mr. Garrison, the Secretary of War, in postponing indefinitely a trip to Alabama and Tennessee, on which he was scheduled to leave Washington today. He was to go to those States to examine river and harbor projects, which are within his jurisdiction, and he telegraphed to officials at the places he had expected to visit that he would be unable to keep his engagements. "At a time like this, I think I should remain in Washington," was his only comment.

"No Time to Rock the Boat."

Secretary Bryan was willing to tell of the dispatches he had received from diplomatic and consular officers in England and Ireland giving information in regard to the lost and rescued Americans of the Lusitania, but he did not care to make any comment regarding the possible attitude of the United States Government. Asked for a statement that might be made to the country, Mr. Bryan finally consented to say this:

"The public does not need any advice. This is no time to rock the boat."

All these tend to indicate that sentiment in the Government circles concerning the Lusitania disaster has not crystallized to the point where the determination of any definite mode of procedure is in sight. Mr. Tumulty's statement in behalf of the President, Secretary Bryan's remark about "rocking the boat" and cautious expressions on the part of other officials all point to the view that the Administration will make no move until it has had ample time to ascertain all the facts connected with the tragedy, and to consider the consequences to this country of any radical step.

Bryan Starts Inquiries.

The first move to ascertain the facts has been taken. Secretary Bryan said today that he had sent instructions to James W. Gerard, the American Ambassador at Berlin, to obtain a report from the German Government in regard to the sinking of the Lusitania. While Mr. Bryan did not say so, this course showed that he was already satisfied of the truth of the reports from Queenstown that a German submarine had fired torpedoes into the big Cunarder.

Mr. Bryan said he had called on Walter Page, the American Ambassador at London, for a full report of all the circumstances connected with the sinking of the Lusitania. These two things were all that has been done by the State Department in connection with an investigation into the disaster, Mr. Bryan explained.

While he showed a disinclination to answer the questions of newspapermen, Mr. Bryan made exceptions in a few instances, but his responses were always cautious. Asked if he had been in conference with President Wilson he said that he had not, and added: "I think you had better give us a little latitude in our conferences, but it so happens that I have not communicated with the President directly or indirectly, by wire or wireless."

The German Warning.

To other questions Mr. Bryan replied that the State Department had discouraged, as far as it was possible, American citizens from going abroad excepton business during the war, and had advised naturalized citizens of the United States not to go abroad at all. Mr. Bryan answered in the negative a question whether he had ever had any communications with the German Embassy concerning the advertisement inserted by the embassy in American newspapers on the day the Lusitania sailed, and repeated in newspapers this morning, warning Americans not to take passage for Europe on British vessels or the vessels of Great Britain's allies.

The attitude of President Wilson and Secretary Bryan is taken to mean that the Lusitania tragedy will not become the subject of consideration between the President and his Cabinet until after full reports have been received from Ambassador Gerard, who is expected to give the German version of the affair, and Ambassador Page, who will furnish the official report of the British Government, and the accounts obtained by American diplomatic and consular officers in England and Ireland.

It is a very general opinion in Washington that the Administration is really waiting to ascertain the sentiment of the country with reference to the tragedy, with the idea of being guided by that, but nothing that was said or could be learned here today in official quarters took this view out of the realm of supposition. In brief, the only definite information as to the feeling in the Administration circle and the course that the President is pursuing is to be found in the statement made tonight by Secretary Tumulty in behalf of the resident.

Glad Congress Is Closed.

Enough developed today, however, to indicate that some or most of the highest officers of the Government are profoundly thankful that Congress is not in session. This is due mainly to a realization that the Lusitania affair would be almost certain to cause discussion in that body, and speeches there might tend to arouse the country and produce grave national feeling.

Public opinion was expressed today in Congressional quarters both friendly to and antagonistic to the Administration, that the sinking of the American oiltank steamer Gulflight a week ago was more important, so far as the effect on the relations of Germany and the United States was concerned, than the loss of the American lives in the Lusitania disaster. Senator William J. Stone, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, one of the Administration's spokesmen, came out in a statement today in which he placed the Gulflight case in a more serious category than that of the Lusitania. Like Mr. Bryan, Senator Stone advised the American people not to "rock the boat."

Senator Stone said:

"The tragedy is, of course, to be profoundly regretted. If the reports as to the los of life are true, the sympathies of the civilized world will be deeply stirred. For us it seems to me that good sense dictates that we keep our heads until we get our bearings. It is a bad time to get rattled and act impulsively. 'Don't rock the boat.'

"Without expressing an opinion as to our relations to this event or as to our duty in the premises, there are some facts we cannot overlook and are bound to consider. We cannot overlook the fact that the Lusitania was a British ship, flying the British flag, and subject at any time to be put into the actual naval service of the Government. Indeed, it is stated that at the time she was attacked she was carrying military reservists to England for service in the British Army.

Were on British Soil.

"True, there were American citizens aboar, but it must not be forgotten that they went aboard a belligerent ship with full knowledge of the risk and after official warning by the German Government. When on board a British vessel they were on British soil. Was not their position substantially equivalent to being within the walls of a fortified city? If American citizens stay within a city besieged or threatened and the enemy attacks, what should our Government do if our citizens should be injured? I express no opinion at this time. I am merely suggesting reasons why we should maintain our equilibrium and not 'rock the boat' until we know what we are about.

"Aside from the possible loss of American lives, let us ask ourselves just where we come in.

"At the present moment, and with the light now before me, I confess that it appears to me that from our standpoint as a neutral nation the Gulflight case presents a more delicate and serious complication than the case of the Lusitania."

Won't Blow Over.

The anti-Administration view came from a high quarter, the identity of which it is not permissable to disclose. It was said there that "this latest outrage will not blow over in the public mind as the Administration appears to hope will be the case in the Lalaba and Gulflight and Cushing occurrences."

There was agreement, however, with Senator Stone that from the standpoint of international law and customs, the destruction of the Lusitania, a British ship, was not as significant to the people of the United States as the destruction of the Gulflight, a ship of American ownership and register.

According to a contention made in quarters critical of the policy that has been pursued by the Administration in dealing with the German war zone policy, it was pointed out that in one of The Hague agreements even the mail of neutrals, when carried on a ship of a belligerent nation, shall be free from seizure or destruction and must be forwarded to its destination by the nation which might capture the ship. The statement was made also that this agreement provided that neutrals on a captured ship should be free from seizure or detention as prisoners. This showed, it was argued, that the lives of neutrals should be held much more sacred, even if common humanity did not ordain that helpless non-combatants, and especially women and children, should have at least a chance for their lives.

Cargo No Excuse.

It was also asserted that the fact that the Lusitania carried large consignments of ammunition has no bearing on the situation in the light either of international law or the laws of humanity and civilization. The sinking of the Lusitania was designated as another step in Germanys movement to intimidate neutral nations.

Assertions of this charcter were coupled with criticisms of the Administrtion for its delay in demanding reparation in the alaba, the Gulflight, and Cushing cases, and in demanding also that there should not be any repetition of such occurrences. The Administration, it was said, would be greatly disappointed if it expected "this latest outrage to blow over.

The only outspoken demand for holding Germany to a strict accountability for the Lusitania's sinking came from Representative Augustus P. Gardner of Massachusetts, a Republican, who has been foremost in the movement to arouse sentiment in favor of putting the army and the navy in a better state of preparedness for war. Mr. Gardner visited the executive offices today to obtain a card of admission for some friends who wished to see the interior of the White House, and while there made a statement of his views concerning the attitude he thought the Government should pursue with regard to the loss of American lives in the Lusitania disaster.

"I sincerely hope," said Mr. Gardner, "that the President will not recede one inch from his notice to Germany that he would hold her to strict accountability if she blew up American citizens in her submarine warfare. If the President recedes, Uncle Sam will become in the eyes of the world nothing better than a great international bluffer."

Gardner Quotes Lincoln.

To a question as to how he interpreted the warning words "strict accountability" in the American Government's protest to Germany against submarine warfare on merchant vessels, Mr. Gardner answered:

"You remember the message which President Lincoln sent to Lord Palmerston when it was reported that a second Alabama was being fitted out. 'A second Alabama, your Lordship,' said Lincoln, 'means war.'

"I am no international lawyer, but if Roosevelt were President the words 'strict accountability' would have been defined beforehand, so that Germany would have known what they meant, and would have disregarded them at her own peril. Roosevelt might torpedo the Constitution himself, but he would not let anybody else torpedo anything American without knowing the reason why. If I were in the resident's place, I should demand that Germany make instant amends, and I should warn that nation that a recurrence of the outrage of yesterday would mean what Lincoln meant when he warned Lord Palmerston."

Provokes Tumulty.

Mr. Gardner's statement caused provocation at the White House. When Secretary Tumulty heard of it he said that the White House resented Mr. Gardner "using the Executive offices as an annex to his press bureau."

Opinion is growing here that when the Government comes to make representations to Germany concerning the Lusitania it will couple them with references to the death of Leon C. Thrasher, an American citizen, who was lost when the British steamship Falaba was torpedoed more than a month ago, and the sinking of the American steamer Gulflight with the consequent loss of three members of her crew.

Efforts to ascertain at the State Department today why the Government had not addressed a note to Germany on the subject of Thrasher's death, brought out no explanation. In some quarters here it is believed that the Government cannot make a legal case against Germany in regard to Thrasher's death, and that it is in the same position with reference to the deaths of Americans on the Lusitania, but nothing has come to light to indicate that this opinion has any substantial foundation in the manner in which the Administration regards the Thrasher and Lusitania cases.

CALIFORNIA MOVE TO BACK UP WILSON

Resolution in Legislature to Support Any Action He May Take in Lusitania Case.

SACRAMENTO, Cal., May 8.—A resolution "Relative to the President's request for an expression of public opinion" on the sinking of the Lusitania was introduced in the California Senate and Assembly today and referred to a committee. The resolution is as follows:

"Resolved, That the Legislature convey to President Wilson the message that its people will indorse whatever action, no matter how severe he may deem warranted, and that the Legislature recommends immediate steps to increase the strength of the navy for adequate protection of the honor of the nation and the lives of its citizens."

SAW HELPLESS SCORES SWEPT TO THEIR DOOM

Women and Children Plunged in Mass as the Lusitania Heeled Up.

CORK, May 8.—"From the day we sailed we complacently spoke of the possibilities of the German menace, but no one believed it, for we scorned the idea of being torpedoed," said F. J. Gauntlett of Washington, who was traveling with A. L. Hopkins, a passenger who is among the missing, and S. M. Knox of Philadelphia, who was saved.

"A number of us were going over on business. It was shortly after 2—probably ten minutes past—and I was lingering in the dining saloon chatting with my friends, when the first explosion occurred. We knew at once what had happened.

"Shortly the ship listed perceptibly. I shouted to the others to close the ports. Some of us went to our berths and put on lifebelts.

"On making our way to the deck we were informed that there was no danger and we need not be alarmed, but the ship was gradually sinking deeper into the water and efforts were made to launch the boats.

"Fifty or more people entered the first boat, and as it swung from the davits it fell suddenly. I think most of the occupants perished. Other boats were launched with the greatest difficulty.

"Swinging free from one of them as it descended, I struck out, swimming strongly and steadily for a piece of wreckage which I observed. On reaching it I found it was one of the collapsible boats, but I had to rip the canvas with a knife before I could get it open. Another passenger climbed into it, and between us we were able to get about thirty people out of the water. While we were thus engaged I noticed that the Lusitania was gradually sinking.

"Women and children, under the protection of men, had clustered in lines on the port side, and as the ship made her plunge, down a little by the head and heeling at an angle of nearly 90 degrees, this little army slid down toward the starboard side, dashing themselves against each other as they went until they were engulfed."

Mr. Gauntlett said that he heard only one explosion, and the whole tragedy was over in twenty minutes.

TEXAS RESENTS ATTACK.

People Love Peace, but Won't Endure This, Says Lumberman.

John H. Kirby of Houston, Texas, one of the leading lumbermen in the Southwest, who is at the Waldorf, said he believed he was echoing the sentiment of his section of the country in saying that while peace was desired by Americans, the Germans must be made to stop waging war upon American citizens.

SURVIVORS TELL HOW THEY ESCAPED

BELTS KEPT OTHERS AFLOAT

QUEENSTOWN, Sunday, May 9.—Survivors of the Lusitania, who have been brought here give, in their stories of experiences, a thrilling picture of the disaster:

"Although it was a tremendous shock to everybody, there was not so much excitement as one would expect in such a catastrophe. It occurred so suddenly that we had not much time to realize what was happening. When I saw the ship was sinking, I jumped overboard, just as I was. I had no lifebelt, but I picked up a bit of flotsam. Finally I got to an upturned boat and clung to that. Later, with some others who had swum to this boat, we managed to right it. Then we climbed in and started to rescue as many as we could reach.

Saw Submarine Only a Moment.

"The German submarine made no attempt to save anybody. We saw it for a moment just before it dived.

"The first torpedo struck us between the first and second funnels. The Lusitania shook, and settled down a bit. Two other torpedoes quickly followed, and soon finished our ship. Four or five of our lifeboats went down with her, and the tremendous suction as the liner was engulfed dragged many people down also.

"The noise of the explosion was not very great. The first torpedo burst with a big thud, and we knew that we were doomed. We had floated about two hours in our small boat before the first rescue steamers arrived. Previous to this time some small shore boats and fishing smacks came along and helped us."

Objected to Lifebelts.

The Rev. H. W. Simpson, a passenger in the second cabin, saved himself by clinging to an upturned boat.

"After a struggle we filled this boat with all we could rescue," Dr. Simpson said. "We tied a pair of trousers to an oar and hoisted it as a signal of distress. A big trawler came along and took us aboard.

"When we were struck I was in the saloon. Lifebelts were handed around, but the people did not want to put them on and they rushed off to the deck just as they were."

"I was talking with Mr. Winters of the Cunard Line when the ship was hit," said Charles C. Harnwick of New York, who has crossed the Atlantic sixty-one times. "Winters got into Boat No. 17, which overturned, and then swam to Boat No. 19. Most of the saloon passengers were at luncheon and the proportion saved was small.

"Mrs. M. M. Pappadopoulo, who was on her way to Athens with her husband, swam for a long distance toward shore before she was picked up. She believes her husband was drowned."

Bertram Jenkins of New York helped two women into a boat. This overturned as it reached the water, but later he saw one of the women, Miss Brandell, an opera singer, at Queenstown.

Boy's Story of the Wreck.

W. G. E. Meyers of Stratford, Ontario, a lad of 16, who was on his way to join the British Navy as a cadet, said:

"I had just gone to the upper deck after luncheon to play a game of quoits with two other boys. One of them, looking over the side, saw a white streak in the water and shouted:

"'There's a torpedo coming straight at us.'

"We watched it until it struck us, with an awful explosion. Then we rushed down to the boatdeck. Just as we got there a huge quantity of wood splinters and great masses of water flew all around us.

"A second torpedo struck us about four minutes after the first. I went below to get a lifebelt and met a woman, who was frenzied with fear. I tried to calm her and helped her into a boat. Then I saw a boat which was nearly swamped. I got into it and with other men baled it out. Then a crowd of men clambered into it and nearly swamped it.

"We got only 200 yards away when the Lusitania sank, her bow first. Many persons sank with her, drawn down by the suction. Their shrieks were appalling. We had to pull hard to get away, and as it was we were almost dragged down. We saved all the women and children we could, but a great many of them went down."

WERE SAVED BY LIFE BELTS.

Some Passengers Avoided the Boats and Thus Escaped.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

QUEENSTOWN, May 8, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—William Browne of Alaska, one of the survivors of the Lusitania, told this story of his experience:

"The first thing I knew of anything wrong was when I heard the report of an explosion, and the word went around that the vessel had been struck. She was then heeling over and sinking fast.

"The crew were helping the passengers to get into lifeboats, the women and children as far as we could gather them together being put in first.

"I and others were holding on to the rails, and as there were a number running for the boats it was no good for me to try and get a boat. So I said to myself: 'A lifebelt is the thing for me.'

"I went down to the cabin and got one of the new lifebelts. I put it on and slid down a long rope to a boat on the port side, which was nearly at the level of the water. With some of the sailors we got her free and the boat floated. We had to bale her out, and in order to do so had to break in the heads of the little fresh water casks.

"When we had her baled out we got in as many people as we could. We were in the water rowing about for a couple of hours when we saw some steamboats coming along, and they picked us up."

Went Down Rope to Sea.

Dr. MacRedy, a young Dublin man, made this statement:

"I was on the deck about 2 o'clock. The weather was fine and bright and the sea was calm. Suddenly I heard a terrific explosion, followed by another, and the cry went around that the ship had been struck by a torpedo. She began to settle immediately and listed over so heavily to starboard that the port boats could not be launched. A lot of people made a rush for the boats, but I went down to my cabin, took off my coat and vest, picked up a lifebelt, and put it on.

"On getting up again I found the decks awash and the boat going down fast by the head. I slipped along to the rail, and, catching a rope, dropped into the sea. Soon afterward I was picked up by one of the boats.

"We hung around for some time, and eventually were taken up by one of the steamboats.

"Naturally there was excitement among the passengers when it was known that the vessel had been struck, but still they seemed to have great confidence in their ship, and though there was a rush for the boats, still there was no panic. All of the crew that I saw acted very well.

"Some of the boats, owing to the position of the vessel, got swamped, and one that I saw turned over no less than three times, but eventually was righted."

H. Smethurst, with his wife, were passengers. Mr. Smethurst said that he did not notice anything wrong until the vessel was struck and she began to settle. After three minutes she had listed so much that some of the passengers thought that she was going to capsibe. Yet several did not appeal to realize that the Lusitania could be sunk.

Mr. Smethurst got his wife into one of the lifeboats and waited on deck himself. Mrs. Smethurst appealed to him as she was going away to come with her, but he said that the women and children should go first. He remained on board, got a lifebelt, and later slipped into the water, being picked up by one of the boats.

They were rowing about, he thought, for two or three hours, and then they saw different steamers which came to their assistance.

SAW THE SUBMARINE 1,000 YARDS FROM SHIP

QUEENSTOWN, May 8.—A sharp lookout for submarines was kept aboard the Lusitania as she approached the Irish coast, according to Ernest Cowper, a Toronto newspaper man, who was among the survivors landed here.

He said that after the ship was torpedoed there was no panic among the crew, but that they went about the work of getting passengers into the boats in a prompt and efficient manner.

"As we neared the coast of Ireland," said Mr. Cowper, "we all joined in the lookout, for a possible attack by a submarine was the sole topic of conversation.

"I was chatting with a friend at the rail about 2 o'clock when suddenly I caught a glimpse of the conning tower of a submarine about 1,000 yards distant. I immediately called my friend's attention to it. Immediately we both saw the track of a torpedo, followed almost instantly by an explosion. Portions of splintered hull were sent flying into the air, and then another torpedo struck. The ship began to list to starboard.

"The crew at once proceeded to get the passengers into boats in an orderly, prompt, and efficient manner. Miss Helen Smith appealed to me to save her. I placed her in a boat and saw her safely away. I got into one of the last boats to leave.

"Some of the boats could not be launched as the vessel was sinking. There was a large number of women and children in the second cabin. Forty of the children were less than a year old."

From interviews with passengers it appears that when the torpedoes burst they sent forth suffocating fumes, which had their effect on the passengers, causing some of them to lose consciousness.

Two stokers, Byrne and Hussey of Liverpool, gave a few details. They said the submarine gave no notice and fired two torpedoes, one hitting No. 1 stoke hole and the second the engine room. The first torpedo was discharged at 2 o'clock. In twenty-five minutes the great liner disappeared.

FLAGS AT HALF STAFF HERE.

Morgan Firm and Others Show Respect for Americans Lost.

Flags at half staff hung from the offices of J. P. Morgan & Co., Harris, Winthrop & Co., and other international banking houses yesterday out of respect to the Americans who went down with the Lusitania. At the Morgan offices it was said that the disaster was considered a national calamity, because more than 100 citizens of the United States evidently had lost their lives. Another element was that a score or more of those who were believed lost had been friends of members of the Morgan firm.

Gloom was mingled in the financial district with the spirit of celebration, because of the arrival of the fleet of war vessels in the harbor. Evidence of this was displayed outwardly. In Broadway buildings were decorated with flags floating from the tops of their staffs, while a block away, in Broad Street, sorrow was reflected in the banners at half staff.

A feeling of depression was discernible throughout the financial community, and anxious men in the large banking and brokerage houses asked many times by telephone for news from the Cunard office.

CITY IS NOW A VAST MORGUE

QUEENSTOWN, Sunday, May 9.—This city never witnessed before such a sad day as yesterday, when the extent of the Lusitania tragedy became visible.

All through the day the bodies of victims were being brought in from the sea by trawlers and other craft. Most of these were of dead picked up in the water close to the scene of the sinking, and the town soon became a vast morgue, as it were. Of the dead recovered a large proportion are women.

The Cunard Line warehouse, which was used as a temporary morgue, was speedily filled, and sixty more bodies were taken to the Market Hall. Others were laid out in the military mortuary.

Additional dead lie in hotels and boarding houses, the victims of injuries and exhaustion resulting from the struggle for life.

The victims are being identified by means of letters and valuables. Each body, as it is received, is numbered and reverently laid on a platform.

Mother with Child in Arms.

At the Cunard wharf lies a mother still clasping in her arms the body of her three months' old baby. The bodies of several other babies have been found.

Two little children who were brought ashore clasped in each other's arms have not yet been identified.

The bodies of several handsome young American women are among those awaiting identification at the Market Hall. Some of them are wearing wrist watches which stopped at about 3 o'clock.

The spectacle at the Market Hall is poignant beyond expression. Most of the bodies there are of women. Some of them are without shoes, and others are wearing only one shoe, evidence of a hurried attempt to free themselves of hampering attire.

The naval and military authorities of Queenstown rendered every assistance possible in removing the dead and assisting the injured to hospitals.

The manager of the Cunard Line obtained hotel accommodations as well as rooms in lodging houses, and here the survivors were sent.

The women landing presented a pitiful appearance. Some of them were covered only with blankets. Others were only partly clad, having cast aside as much clothing as possible when they donned lifebelts.

Most of the men, women, and children helped ashore by local bluejackets still wore these belts. One woman more than 70 years old was taken from the water after having been kept afloat for some time by the lifebelt she wore.

Mrs. Stanley Lines, who was brought ashore in one of the ship's boats, immediately started a search of the city to find her husband. She learned at 4 o'clock in the morning that he was lying dead in one of the hotels.

Motor cars were brought into service to take the injured to hospitals. The less seriously injured were helped ashore by sailors and soldiers.

Both men and women rescued, if they were able to walk, refused to remain in their hotels. They haunted the docks, waiting and watching for friends and relatives.

SPEED OF LUSITANIA SWAMPED LIFEBOATS

Second Torpedo Cut the Steam Pipes, Making It Impossible to Slow Up the Ship.

QUEENSTOWN, May 8.—According to several members of the crew of the Lusitania, whose statements are corroborated by passengers, the swamping of the lifeboats was due to the high speed of the vessel.

They say that after the first torpedo exploded the Captain gave the order for full steam ahead, and that the vessel was making 21 knots when the second torpedo severed the steampipes from the engines. This made impossible the immediate slowing down of the engines.

The speed with which the Lusitania plunged ahead, notwithstanding her heavy list to starboard, caused the lifeboats to foul the davits.

THREE VESSELS SUNK IN THE NORTH SEA

Submarines Active Off the Scottish Coast—One Victim a Wilson Line Ship.

LONDON, May 8.—German submarines are now active off the English and Scottish coasts in the North Sea. A dispatch from Hull says the Wilson Line steamer Truro was sunk this afternoon by the German submarine U-39 off Day Island. No lives were lost. The crew of the steamer was landed at Rosyth Castle, Scotland.

A dispatch to the Central News from Aberdeen says the steam trawler Bennington, one of three which escaped from a German submarine on Sunday, was sunk by shell fire from a submersible off Aberdeenshire at 4 o'clock Friday afternoon. The crew was saved by a Norwegian steamer.

The British steamer Don of Goole has been torpedoed by a German submarine off Coquet Island, near the Northumberland coast. The crew was rescued.

fusion in Queenstown yesterday in the face of the great tragedy, and the compilation of the list of the rescued proceeded very slowly.

The people of the Irish city opened their homes to those who had been saved, and everything possible was done for their comfort.

Few bodies were brought in after midday, and the hope that other persons than those reported alive were saved was practically abandoned.

The United States Consul at that port could account late in the day for only 51 Americans saved out of 188 who were aboard. His roll did not include the names of Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt, Charles Frohman, Elbert Hubbard, Justus Miles Forman, the author, or Charles Klein, the playwright.

The body of Dr. F. S. Pearson of New York and Lowell, Mass., was identified in one of the morgues in Queenstown last evening.

PERHAPS TWO SUBMARINES.

Dublin Dispatch Suggests Lusitania Was Hit on Both Sides.

LONDON, May 8.—The Star has a dispatch from Dublin, saying that it seems to have been established that more than one submarine took part in the attack on the Lusitania. The ship is said to have been hit on both the starboard and port side. The missiles killed many on board.

Among the dead brought in is a young stoker who took part in the naval fight off the Falkland Islands.

SAW DISASTER FROM SHORE.

Coastguardsman and Cork Farmer Say Ship Sank in Eight Minutes.

CORK, May 8.—A coastguard who witnessed the sinking of the ship, believes that she sank within eight minutes.

His story is confirmed by a Cork farmer, who was working near Old Head Kinsale, when he heard shots, and looking seaward saw a steamer with her bows in the air. He said that nardly ten minutes later she keeled over on her side and sank.

A resident of Ardfield estimates that the ship was five miles from shore when he heard the crash of the torpedo as it pierced her side. For a moment she seemed to move slowly straight ahead, then turned suddenly and then stopped, her bow sinking and the stern rising. Then she keeled over and disappeared from sight. Within a few minutes ten rescue boats had reached the spot where she went down.

TORPEDO PIERCED THE ENGINE ROOM

QUEENSTOWN, May 8, (Dispatch to The London Daily Chronicle.)—The Lusitania was torpedoed while passengers were at luncheon, and no warning whatever was given. The vessel was struck near the second funnel, and at once began to sink by the head. A second, and some say a third, torpedo struck the ship, which in a few minutes began to list heavily, rendering the lowering of many of the boats impossible.

The first torpedo passed clean through the engine room. One report says that both the first and the second torpedoes were fired at the starboard side while another states that one was from the port and the second from the starboard side.

One eyewitness says that before the liner made its final plunge the stern stood straight up in the air for several minutes.

One survivor states that the Captain, who was on the bridge at the time, gave the order not to lower the boats, but others say that no order whatever was given, and that it soon became a case of each for himself.

In all 500 people of many nationalities were landed in Queenstown, and 100 bodies have been brought here.

There was a great rush to the Cunard wharf as the first boat conveying rescued berthed. Stringent relations were enforced by the authorities to prevent any congestion that might hinder the facilities for removal of the rescued to the hotels.

As the survivors were landed the scene was most pathetic. Many were borne on stretchers. Some were dead. Others limped between naval men, and still more walked between lines of people who cheered them as they passed along, without coats or any comfortable apparel.

Most of the passengers landed from the Stormcock presented a very sad sight. Not one of them had any substantial garments on them, and the majority of the men were without their coats and carried lifebelts. Their appearance was dejected, but this was nothing compared with the women, who were without hats, cloaks, or wraps.

FIFTY NEW YORKERS LOST IN FIRST CABIN

ALBERT L. HOPKINS MISSING

There were about eighty residents of New York City on the Lusitania as first cabin passengers, and of this number it is probable that at least fifty have been drowned. Among this number are many persons of prominence in the city and outside of it. Not all of those whose names have not appeared on a list of survivors, however, should be counted dead, because it is said to be possible that some who have landed have been unable to report their safety.

It was generally accepted by last night that Justus Miles Forman, the author of many novels and the play, "The Hyphen," had been drowned. His name was in none of the lists of survivors, and none of his friends or relatives in this country, as far as coould be learned, had heard from him directly or indirectly. The chief facts of Mr. Forman's life were printed in THE TIMES yesterday.

Edgar Gorer, of the firm of Gorer of London, is also among the missing. While Mr. Gorer is a London man, because of his extensive activities in the field of art, he was well known here. He came to New York often on business or pleasure and was returning to London on the Lusitania after such a journey. William Perin, manager of Mr. Gorer's New York shop at 560 Fifth Avenue, said yesterday that he had received a cablegram from Mr. Gorer's London manager, saying: "No news." Just before sailing Mr. Gorer instituted suit against the Duveen Brothers for $575,000 damages because they had criticised Chinese porcelains Mr. Gorer was about to sell to Henry C. Frick.

Dr. Pearson and Wife.

Dr. Fred Stark Pearson, one of the leading consulting engineers of this country, and his wife are among those missing from the list of survivors. Dr. Pearson, whose office is at 115 Broadway, was the head of the Pearson-Farquhar syndicate, which has undertaken extensive engineering work in all parts of the world. With Percival Farquhar, his associate, Dr. Pearson lately became interested in the Mexican Northwestern Railway system and in an immense hydraulic engineering project in South America. Dr. Pearson was born in Lowell, Mass., in 1861, and after a common school education, worked as a ticket agent for the Boston & Maine Railroad. While employed by the railroad he attended Tufts College as regularly as possible, and by his interest in engineering attracted the attention of Professor Dolebar, who finally made it possible for him to become an enrolled student. It is said that while a student he invented an electrical device by which, when studying in his room, he was warned of the approach of trains demanding his presence at the station.

Dr. Pearson left the service of the railroad to become an instructor in the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, where he remained for a year, after which he returned to Tufts College to complete his course. He was graduated with diplomas in chemistry and civil, eletrical, and mining enginering. Aftr graduation he became the manager of the Somerville Electric Light Company, and later consulting engineer of the Brooklyn Heights Railway Company. In 1893 he organized the Dominion Coal Company, and in the following year he bbecame the chief engineer of the Metropolitan Street Railway Company in New York. The old Columbus Avenue and Lexington Avenue cable roads were constructed under his direction.

It was while associated with the Metropolitan Street Railway Company that Dr. Pearson invented a system of underground conduits for surface cars, and eighty-one miles of these conduits were constructed by him. In connection with this work he designed and superintended the erection of the 70,000 horse power electric station in Ninety-sixth Street, for which achievement he has been especially praised.

Dr. Pearson was one of the first to recognize the opportunities in South America, where his most recent undertaking was the construction of a railway, light, and power system in Sao Paulo, Brazil. He was a member of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers, the Institute of Civil Engineers, and many other technical societies; President of the Barcelona Traction, Light and Power Company, the Mexican Tramways Company, the Rio de Janeiro Tramway, Light and Power Company, the Mexican Light and Power Company, the Mexico Northwestern Railway Company, and a Director of the Sao Paulo Tramway, Light and Power Company.

While considering himself a New Yorker, Dr. Pearson maintained homes at Great Barrington, Mass.; Coombe House, Kingston Hill, Surrey, England, and 271 Calle Mailarca, Barcelona, Spain. He was amember of the University, New York Yacht, Engineers', and Railroad Clubs.

Mrs. Pearson, who is also missing, was formerly Miss Mabel Ward of Lowell, Mass. She married Dr. Pearson on Jan. 5, 1887.

Commander Stackhouse.

Commander J. Foster Stockhouse, R. N., retired, who is among the missing, had been over here raising funds for an expedition to chart unmapped islands in the Pacific Ocean, and, according to his friend, Henry R. Rittenberg, who finished his portrait just before he sailed, he had succeeded in getting promises of nearlyq $900,000 for his contemplated work. It was his intention to acquire and use the Discovery, the vessel of the Scott expedition.

"Commodore Stackhouse, who stayed at the Lotos Club while here, and who had many friends in Philadelphia and Chicago as well as in New York," said Mr. Rittenberg yesterday, "had a theory that the sinking of the Titanic was due to the iceberg that she struck being held on a submerged rock, and he believed that if surveys and soundings of the paths of navigation could be made it would result in tremendous benefit to the world.

"Robert E. Dearbergh, Vice President of the Earp-Thomas Farmogerm Company of New York, accompanied Commodore Stackhouse on the Lusitania, and it was their intention to get the Discovery and bring her over here and exhibit her in many cities which might be reached yy various waterways, and so add to the funds that had been raised. Mr. Dearbergh, an Englishman, was to have been one of the Discovery's company. Most of the others who had volunteered are at the front.

"The portrait I had painted was finished shortly before the departure of the Lusitania. I was to have sent it over on another steamer, but on their way to the pier last Saturday morning he and Mr. Dearbergh stopped here at my studio, and the Commander showed me a letter he had just got from his little girl, telling how she and her mother were looking forward to getting the portrait after his long absence. So he told me to wrap the portrait up and he would take it with him, and he did so. I asked him why he wanted to go over on the Lusitania, in view of the warning that had been advertised by the German Embassy.

"'Oh, the boat is too fast to be torpedoed. They can't get near her,' he replied. 'Besides, there are too many Americans on her, and they would not dare.'

"Commander Stackhouse had a letter from Sir Edward Grey to Secretary Bryan, and he met President Wilson, and dined with Colonel Roosevelt and ex-President Taft."

Albert Lloyd Hopkins.

Another well-known New York man still among the missing is Albert Lloyd Hopkins, President of the Newport News Shipbuilding and Dry Dock Company, which built the superdreadnought Pennsylvania, lauached on March 16. Mr. Hopkins was on his way to Europe on business connected with the war, but the exact nature of the business was withheld at the offices of the Newport News Company, 233 Broadway. It was rumored, though not verified, that Mr. Hopkins's particular mission was to negotiate contracts for the manufacture of armor plate for battleships, a product his company has been licensed to manufacture since 1900.

Mr. Hopkins was 42 years old, and was educated at the Renssalaer Polytechnic Institute, Troy. He associated himself with the Newport News Shipbuilding and Drydock Company fifteen years ago. Previous to his election as President, he was the General Manager of the yards at Newport News and superintended the building of some of the largest and finest ships constructed in America.

The German converted cruisers, Kronprinz Wilhelm and Prince Eitel Friedrich, are interned in the yards of the company at Newport News, and it was said yesterday that one of Mr. Hopkins's objects in going abroad was to have their status in relation to the company determined.

Mr. Hopkins's wife, who was Miss May Davies of Virginia, is at his home, 270 Riverside Drive. She said yesterday that she had tried to dissuade her husband from sailing on the Lusitania, but that he had considered his business so important that she had discontinued her objections.

Mrs. Ogden H. Hammond.

Mrs. Ogden H. Hammond or 30 East Seventieth Street and Bernardsville, N. J., is thought to have been lost. She sailed with her husband, who is Secretary of the Standard Plunger Elevator Company, the Bernardsville National Bank, and of several other institutions, and when the Lusitania was struck both of them, according to a cablegram from Mr. Hammond to his family, succeeded in getting into a lifeboat. But the boat capsized, the cablegram said, and Mr. Hammond was unable to reach his wife in the water. He was finally picked up and landed in Queenstown, but he was unable to find any trace of his wife. Mrs. Hammond's three children are at the home in Bernardsville. Mrs. Hammond was a member of the Colony Club.

Herbert S. Stone.

Herbert Stuart Stone, eldest son of Melville E. Stone, General Manager of the Associated Press, is also among the missing. Mr. Stone was formerly the head of the book publishing firm of H. S. Stone & Co., and he founded and edited two successful magazines, "The Cnap Book" and "The House Beautiful." Mr. Stone graduated from Harvard in 1894, and since then has been known socially and through his business connections in New York and Chicago. He maintained a New York home at 162 East Seventy-fourth Street, and was a member of the Players, Metropolitan, and Brook Clubs of New York, and the University and other clubs of Chicago. Mr. Stone's wife, who did not accompany him on the Lusitania, was formerly Mary G. McCormick.

Mrs. Kennedy and Daughter.

Mrs. C. Hickson Kennedy and Miss Katheryn Kennedy have not been heard from. They are nieces of Robert J. Hickson of Hickson & Co., ladies' tailors at 657 Fifth Avenue. Mr. Hickson made many eforts to obtain definite news yesterday without results.

Charles F. Fowles of Scott & Fowles, interior decorators at 590 Fifth Avenue, and his wife, who lived at 1 West Sixty-fourth Street, have not been heard from. It is feared that they have perished.

Thomas B. King, a buyer for Brokaw Brothers, 22 Astor Place, is thought by some to have been saved, by others to have been lost. Howard C. Brokaw received a cablegram yesterday which read, "Saved. Everything lost. No money." But the message was unsigned, and Mr. Brokaw did not know whether it came from Mr. King or James Leary of Brooklyn, who was also going abroad for Brokaw Brothers. Later Mr. Brokaw learned that Mrs. Leary had received the same message from her husband, and that Mrs. King, who is at her home in Rye, N. Y., had heard no word, so he concluded that his cablegram came from Mr. Leary. But he expressed the hope that it applied to both Mr. King and Mr. Leary.

Gerald A. Letts, an importer and dealer in antiques at 21 East Fifty-first Street, is another among the missing. He is an Englishman and was going to join his wife on the Lusitania.

Allen D. Loney, who drove his own automobile as an ambulance in France last Winter, is not named in any list of survivors, although his wife and daughter, Miss Virginia, are reported saved. The family spent the Winter at the Hotel Gotham, and were on their way to their English country house in Northampton.

Herman A. Myers, head of the feather importing house of H., E. & S. Myers, of 684 Broadway, is missing also.

Others Not Reported Saved.

Other New Yorkers not reported on any list of survivors were: Edwin Perkins of the Hotel Van Rensselaer; Robert Dearbergh, retired Vice President of the Thomas Farmogerm Company; Thomas Bloomfield of 24 Broad Street; A. H. Adams of the United States Rubber Company; Miss M. A. Baker, J. J. Black, Mr. and Mrs. Allan Dredge, Mrs. F. C. Brown, M. Cohen, Mrs. William C. Crighton, Francis C. Kellett, Mrs. H. W. Ketchum, Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Kimball, William McLean, Fred A. McMurty, Mrs. Henry D. MacConna, M. B. Medbury, C. B. Mills, R. T. Moodie, F. G. Naumann, J. H. Page, Henry Polland, George A. Powell, Max M. Schwarcz, Mrs. R. D. Shymer, George Tiberghien, Miss Mabel Twenlow, Mrs. A. T. Wakefield, D. Walker, T. H. Williams, C. F. Williamson, and Arthur Wood.

HUBBARD JUST PARDONED.

President Restored Citizenship to Give Passport for Trip.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—The report trat Elbert Hubbard was among those lost on the Lusitania brought out today the fact that six weeks ago President Wilson granted a pardon to "Fra Albertus," who had been convicted of an offense against the postal laws, in order to restore his citizenship so that he could obtain a passport for the trip on which he lost his life.

As the story was told today for the first time, Mr. Hubbard came to Washington in March to obtain a passport. When he made his application he was asked the usual question whether he had ever been convicted of a crime and thereby forfeited his citizenship and he then explained that he had been charged two years ago with violating the postal laws and on the advice of his lawyer had pleaded guilty and had been let off with a fine. Subsequently, he said, he had learned that the offense to which he had pleaded guilty was a felony, and that he had been deprived of his rights as an American citizen.

When Mr. Hubbard learned that he could not obtain a passport he went to the White House and laid his trouble before Joseph P. Tumulty, the Secretary to the President. He suggested to Mr. Tumulty that the only way to obtain the passport was through a pardon from the President for the offense of which he had been convicted. Mr. Tumulty was sympathetic and went immediately to the Cabinet room, where the Cabinet was in session, and laid the case before the President, Secretary Bryan, and Attorney General Gregory. He found a ready response to his statement of the plight in which Mr. Hubbard found himself. The Attorney General recommended a pardon, and the following day the pardon was granted. Mr. Hubbard had no difficulty after that in getting his passport from the State Department.

The official record in the case shows that on Jan. 11, 1913, Elbert Hubbard was charged in the United States District Court for the Western District of New York, sitting at Buffalo, with having committed an offense against the postal laws, that he pleaded guilty, and was sentenced to pay a fine of $100 the same day. In February, 1913, President Taft declined to grant a pardon to Mr. Hubbard on the ground that the application was premature. On March 22, 1915, the Attorney General recommended to the President that Mr. Hubbard receive a pardon to restore his civil rights. The pardon was granted by the President on March 23 and the fact recorded in the Department of Justice on March 25.

Hubbard Foresaw Danger.

CINCINNATI, Ohia, May 8.—"I may meet with a mine or a submarine over there, or I may hold friendly converse with a stray bullet in the trenches." Thus wrote Elbert Hubbard to his friend, E. W. Edwards of this city, shortly before he boarded the Lusitania last Saturday.

The letter, now in the hands of Mr. Edwards, was one of the last things that Mr. Hubbard ever penned. He wrote Mr. Edwards about his plans for getting interesting inside news and views of the great war at first hand, and said he intended to "store the information in my head so as to escape the censor." He concluded his letter by saying: "I shall return June 20, perhaps."

THEATRE DISTRICT MOURNS FROHMAN

"There Was Only One C. F.," Says David Belasco in Tribute to His Memory.

Ellen Terry and A. H. Woods Gave Up Passage on Lusitania—Cable from Mrs. Klein.

Expressionsof sorrw were heard on all sides in the theatre district yesterday over the fate of Charles Frohman, for the veteran manager was held in the highest esteem, not only by those who came in daily contact with him, but by hundreds of men and women of the stage to whom Mr. Frohman was merely a name to conjure with in their profession.

David Belasco, in association with whom Mr. Frohman made one of his last productions, wrote the following apreciation when it seemed almost certain Mr. Frohman's life was one of those sacrificed:

"I am heart-broken! My dear, dear old friend! My nearest and dearest friend! It is horrible to think that a man who was held in universal esteem and affection, who had thewarm, open heart of a child, who gave employment to hundreds, should have been done to death by such sheer brutality! There was and is only one 'C. F.' He did more for the theatre than any other man. He was in touch with the authors of the universe. He took America over to England and brought England bask to us. He filled a unique position in all countries and belonged to the whole world, which will grieve for him as I do now. My heart goes out to his brothers and sisters, to Miss Maude Adams, and all those associated with him, because his place can never be taken and they must forever mourn his loss.

"If a long night's vigil and tears could bring him back, Charlie would be with us now.

"If this be war, to needlessly take a life so useful and so precious, then I would like the chance to put a musket to my shoulder and shoot down the mad fiend who conceived the vile idea.

Daniel Frohman Dazed.

Daniel Frohman, the eldest of the three Frohman brothers, of whom the third is Gustave, was dazed by the shock. He was up most of Friday night receiving reports in his study above the Lyceum Theatre. The earlier reports that the passengers had all been saved had raised his courage and when the later news came he seemed scarcely able to grasp it. He retired early yesterday morning and did not leave his suite in the Lyceum till the afternoon. The two brothers were always on the closets terms, Daniel assuming a sort of paternal attitude toward his younger kinsman.

Mr. Frohman sailed on the Lusitania against the advice of his associates. All of the members of his executive staff did their utmost to dissuade him from embarking on an English ship, and so real was their fear that telegrams were sent Maude Adams and his other favorite stars on tour asking them to wire their pleas for him to take another boat. But he had crossed on the big ship many times, he had made up his mind to sail at that particular time, and nothing could avail to make him alter his plans.

John D. Williams, his business manager, Edward Sheldon and Paul Potter, the playwrights, went to the pier to see Mr. Frohman off. Mr. Williams said yesterday that Mr. Frohman's refusal to be deterred by warnings when he once had made up his mind to do a thing was characteristic of his career. His life, Mr. Williams said, was full of hazards taken and brought to a successful conclusion until this fatal one.

In the Frohman offices in the Empire Theatre Building the members of his staff hoped for a long time that the lack of definite news meant their chief might be among the survivors, but the hope was a faint one that bordered on despair. It was said the extensive nature of the firm's activities made it imperative that they be carried on without cessation, and that the theatres would remain open, as Mr. Frohman disliked heartily any show of pomp or circumstance. When his fate became definitely known, it was said, a search would be made among his papers for a will.

Many cable messages were sent to Mr. Frohman's London representative, but no answer came in the day.

A cable was received yesterday by Selwyn & Co., from Mrs. Charles Klein, who is in London, saying she had heard nothing definite about her husband, the playwright, who was among the missing. Philip Klein, their son, is in the French war zone taking motion pictures of the fighting.

A. H. Woods, the theatrical manager, had planned to sail on the Lusitania, but the receipt of a telegram of warning caused him to change his plans at the last minute. Ellen Terry, the famous English actress, foreswore the pleasures of a more luxurious passage on the big Cunarder and sailed the same morning on the St. Paul, of the American line.

MAUDE ADAMS WEEPS; DENIES SHE MARRIED

Grieving for Frohman, Actress Gives Performance—Says He Was Not Her Husband.

Special to The New York Times.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., May 8.—Maude Adams was informed of the death of Charles Frohman on reaching the Grand Theatre here for the matinee performance. On hearing the news she collapsed. Preparations were made to call off the performance, but before that was done, she revided and was persuaded to go on. Few of the audience knew the cause of the delay.

In the first act of "Quality Street" she appeared with eyes still puffed and tear stained, and her voice broke repeaeedly in the opening scenes. As the play progressed, however, she mastered her emotions and played the heart free, coquettish flirt in the last two acts with dash and abandon. At the close she refused to see any one and drove straight to her private car, the location of which has been kept secret during her stay here.

Through her manager, W. G. Newman, Miss Adams denied the rumors that she was married to Mr. Frohman.

"Of course," Mr. Newman said, "a warm affection had sprung up between them during the years they had been associated with each other, and the fact that neither had ever married no doubt gave rise to the absurd reports."

When Miss Adams was told that on account of the banks being closed the money could not be refunded to tonight's audience, she consented to appear again. The strain under which she was working, however, was apparent. She expects to continue her western

'I'M NOT HERE!' CRIES COUNT BERNSTORFF

CORNERED BEHIND A DOOR

"Let 'Em Think," Envoy Says When Told Americans Think He Should Say Something.

Count Johann von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, who arrived at the Ritz-Carlton at 6:30 o'clock on Friday night, spent most of yesterday in his room, in consultation with Haniel von Haimhausen, the counselor of the German Embassy, and his secretary, Dr. Edler. To requests for a statement of some kind, he kept sending down word that he was in Washington.

In spite of these projections it was the Count's physical body that was discovered coming out of the Ritz-Carlton just before 6 o'clock last night, for a NEW YORK TIMES reporter who addressed him politely was twice pushed back by the Count, who kept repeating, in spite of ocular and physical evidence to the contrary, that he "wasn't here."

It was only after repeated efforts to induce the Ambassador to say something had continued all the way to the Pennsylvania Station and into the train, where he was finally found concealed behind a door in the buffet smoking car, that he was induced to comply.

His only comment was to question reports that torpedoes from a German submarine had sunk the Lusitania. Previous to this, when one of the reporters had strongly intimated to him that the American people thought he ought to make some sort of statement, the Ambassador, his voice rising to a shrill falsetto, had shouted, "Let 'em think!"

When early in the day a TIMES reporter had sought an interview with Count von Bernstorff at the Ritz-Carlton, word had been sent downstairs that the Count said he was in Washington. At luncheon time he did not go downstairs to the grillroom, nor did he go to the Vanderbilt, one of his favorite lunching places. It was learned that he was lunching in his room with his subordinates. About the middle of the afternoon his valet went out, it was said, to engage accommodation on a Washington train for him. When the valet returned he said that the Count had left for Washington on the 1 o'clock train, and made his affirmation positive.

Von Haimhausen Mum.

Mr. von Haimhausen came out the hotel elevator at 3 o'clock, hurried out of the Madison Avenue door, and got into a taxicab. Before it drove off he was asked if he could make any statement about the sinking of the Lusitania. He was very polite, and replied, with a smile: "You had better see the Ambassador."

There are many ways of getting in and out of the Ritz-Carlton, as Count von Bernstorff long ago discovered. One is to go through from the Ritz-Carlton into Carlton House, and leave by the Forty-seventh Street entrance to the latter. Another is by Madison Avenue, and a third is the Forty-sixth Street main entrance. Also there is a door at the corner of the building in Forty-sixth Street by which, if one descends to the grillroom floor in the elevator.

The Count's method of departure was somewhat different. Punctually at a quarter before 6 o'clock his [illegible] started to make his departure by the grill room route, and just then [illegible] master's step sounded on the stairway overhead. The Count had got out of the elevator near the barber shop on the entresol, and was walking down to the ground floor. He left by the restaurant entrance in Forty-sixth Street.

Taxicab was standing near the corner. The Ambassador told the starter to call it. A reporter for THE TIMES approached the Count as he stood on the sidewalk, and asked if he would not make some statement in reference to the sinking of the Lusitania.

The Ambassador, whose face was set and stern, turned quickly.

"I'm not here," he cried, throwing out his hand. "I'm not here," he repeated, and turned to enter a taxi, which had just driven up. That vehicle, however, was occupied, and he hurried back to the vehicle on the corner, got in, slammed the door, and sank back.

A reporter approached the vehicle, and spoke to the Count, repeating the request for a statement. The Ambassador pushed himself further back into the rear of the car. The request was again repeated.

"Have you nothing to say?" pleaded one of the reporters.

A voice came from the cushions of the taxi. "I'm not here," it said. Yet it was the Count's voice.

Angered by Chauffeur's Delay.

The chauffeur had obligingly waited for the conversation to end. The Ambassador's face flushed with anger. He punched on the floor of the taxicab with his stick.

"Go on! Go on, Damn you!" he cried.

"Faster, faster!" he shouted at the driver.

When he alighted at the Pennsylvania Station, he was again approached by the reporters, who plied him with direct questions.

"Do you think that the sinking of the Lusitania was justified?" he was asked.

"I will not say one word," he replied.

"Don't you think it was cold-blooded murder?"

"I've not a word to say at all. I am the representative of my Government, and I will make a statement when I am ready."

"Don't you know that more than 100 Americans have been murdered," demanded one of his inquisitors, "and that people think you ought to make a statement?"

"Let 'em think," replied the Ambassador.

These questions were put to the Ambassador as he was on his way to the ticket office.

"Do you know it is thought that the announcement of the German Embassy warning people from going in the Lusitania provoked the attack upon her and that you are regarded as murderers?" one reporter asked.

"I shall not say one word," repeated Count von Bernstorff, whose voice now rose shrilly.

After buying his ticket, he went to a telephone booth, with his escort, he still refusing to answer questions.

The Ambassador left the telephone booth so hurriedly he forgit to pay. A messenger boy ran after him, calling, "Five cents, there!" Finally the boy touched him on the arm. The Count turned angrily. Seeing that it was not a reporter who touched him, he put his hand into his pocket and gave the boy a nickel.

Knocks At Car Window.

Still under the escort of the reporters, the Ambassador crosed the station and approached the wrong platform entrance. A reporter set him right. He hurried down the steps and into the 6:08 train. He went through car after car, the reporters trying to attract his attention, and finally entered the buffet smoker, where he did not take a seat, but tucked himself behind a door. His progress through the car had attracted the attention of the passengers, who soon learned that he was the German Ambasador. Several persons on the platform banged on the windows to attract his attention.

A reporter penetrated to the Ambassador's temporary lair, and put another question to him.

"Don't you think that, in view of the intense public interest in the sinking of the Lusitania, you ought to say something?" he asked.

"Not now," was the reply. Then he continued: "Do we know exactly what happened?"

"Anybody who reads the papers knows that," replied the reporter.

"Do we know the Lusitania was torpedoed?" persisted the Ambassador, now turned interviewer.

"Has it not been officially stated that she was attacked with two torpedoes, one striking the engine room, and the other one of the stokeholds?" returned the reported.

"Where did you get your information? From then ewspapers, or from other sources?" the Ambassador asked.

"There is the statement from the Cunnard Line, and it is understood the British Admiralty has confirmed this," replied the reporter.

"We take it that you refuse to make a statement until you have received a communication from your Government," suggested the reporter, and the Count indicated that such was the case, and sank back in relief as the reporter hurried to get off the moving train.

VANDERBILT FAMILY ALL BUT HOPELESS

SEVERE SHOCK TO NEWPORT

The hope that Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt had been saved was practically abandoned last night by his wife and her father, Colonel Isaac Emerson, who waited for news at their apartments in the Hotel Vanderbilt.

Every effort had been made to get some definite word from England, and a cablegram was sent through the New York Central Railroad to the company's representatives in London to charter tugs and start on a search if such a course was permitted by the authorities.

Many called to see Mrs. Vanderbilt, among them Mr. Vanderbilt's sister, Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, and Mrs. Reginald Vanderbilt. Mrs. Vanderbilt, it was said late in the day, was bearing up bravely. She was told that there was still hope, but as the hours passed and no news was received she realized that the hope was all but vain.

The only direct report received by the family was a cablegram at 4 o'clock in the morning from Walter Webb-Ward, the Vanderbilt representative in London, and his message was not encouraging. He said that 600 persons had been saved, but that he could not find trace of Mr. Vanderbilt among them.

Colonel Emerson at last admitted that the only interpretation which could be put on the lack of news was that Mr. Venderbilt was lost. He felt, he said, that a man of Mr. Vanderbilt's prominence would be recognized, if he was saved, even though seriously injured.

Mr. Vanderbilt was the second son of Cornelius H. Vanderbilt, whose fortune was estimated at $100,000,000. His father cut off the eldest son, Cornelius, with $1,000,000 and left generous legacies to other children. The bulk of the estate, said to be then at least $70,000,000, went to Alfred.

Speculation As to Will.

There was much speculation yesterday as to who will inherit the bulk of the great fortune if Mr. Vanderbilt is dead. Mr. Vanderbilt has three sons, William H., by his first wife, who was Miss Ellen French; Alfred Gwynne, Jr., born Sept. 22, 1912, and George, born Sept. 24, 1914, by his second wife, who was Mrs. Smith Hollins McKim. While no definite information could be obtained yesterday, it was understood that Mr. Vanderbilt had made a will by which the larger part of the estate will go ultimately to his second son, Alfred Gwynne, Jr., and that there is also generous provision made for his last son.

The appraisal of the estate of the late Cornelius Vanderbilt, which formed the foundation of Alfred's fortune, showed that his heaviest holdings were in the New York Central securities. Two blocks of bonds represented nearly $10,000,000, and he had 40,468 shares of New York & Harlem Railroad stock, valued at that time at nearly $8,000,000. There were also 20,000 shares of New York Central stock, estimated at $2,740,000, and 16,250 shares of Chicago & Southwestern preferred stock, worth $3,315,000¼ Hise Union Trust Company stock was placed at $1,920,000. Other holdings were in many of the railroads of the country, in banks and various investments most of them considered highly profitabye. Here are some of the investments as listed when an appraisal was made:

West Shore Railroad, first mortgage bonds, $1,100,000; Beech Creek Railroad, first mortgage bonds, $1,080,000; Union Pacific first mortgage railway and land grant, 4 per cent. gold bonds, $520,000; New York Central, Lake Shore, collateral trust 3½ per cent. gold bonds, $4,875,000; New York Central, Michigan Central, collateral trust 3½ per cent. gold bonds, $4,875,000; Chesapeake & Ohio bonds, $470,000; Toledo, St. Louis & Kansas City Railroad first mortgage bonds, $278,300; B. R. T. 5 per cent. bonds, $224,000; Columbia College mortgage, $400,000; 4,945 shares Spuyten Duyvil & Port Morris Railroad stock, $989,000; 8,000 shares Pittsburgh & Lake Erie stock, $800,000; 7,027 shares New York, New Haven & Hartford, $1,520,677; 20,000 shares Wagner Palace Car Company stock, $3,770,000; 5,000 shares Delaware & Hudson Canal stock, $605,000; 2,100 shares Canada Southern stock, $4,109,000; 1,000 shares Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul stock, $131,000; 33,500 shares Cleveland, Cincinnati, Chicago & St. Louis, $1,892,750; 32,000 shares Southern Railroad Company, $362,000; 7,350 shares B. R. T. stock, $712,000; 100 shares Chemical National Bank, $410,000; 100 shares National City Bank, $200,000; 2,500 shares Lincoln Safe Deposit Company stock, $318,750; New York Central & Hudson River Railroad loan equipment loan, $936,259.

One Son Chief Heir.

The stocks given represent some of the larger holdings of the Vanderbilt estate. The figures quoted were estimates by Charles O'Connell, the official appraiser, some years ago. It is said that many of the stocks have greatly increased in value, thus adding to the fortune of Alfred G. Vanderbilt.

The late Cornelius Vanderbilt, father of Alfred, who died in 1899, in leaving mose of his estate to one son, Alfred, followed the example of Commodore Cornelius Vanderbilt (his grandfather) and William H. Vanderbilt, his father. In doing this, however, he left abundant legacies to all of his children, with the exception of Cornelius, who had met with his displeasure. His other children, aside from Cornelius and Alfred G., were Reginald C. Vanderbilt, Miss Gertrude Vanderbilt, now Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, and Miss Alice Vanderbilt, who married Count Szechenyi. Miss Alice Vanderbilt inherited about $12,500,000.

The fact that the bulk of the estate had passed down through one son of each family strengthened the belief yesterday that Alfred G., Jr., would receive the greater part of the fortune. What provision, if any, Mr. Vanderbilt had made for his eldest son, William H., whose mother divorced him, was not learned. The first Mrs. Vanderbilt, who was Mis Ellen French, is wealthy.

Cornelius Vanderbilt, Chairman of the Mayor's Committee for the reception and entertainment of the oficers and men of the Atlantic Fleet, did not participate in the welcoming ceremonies on the flagship Wyoming, and later at the City Hall, yesterday. Mr. Vanderbilt was to have accompanied Acting Mayor McAneny to the Wyoming and was to have been with him when he received Admiral Fletcher and his staff at the City Hall yesterday afternoon.

Mr. Vanderbilt said that he had decided not to take part in the ceremonies owing to the uncertainty of the fate of his brother Alfred Gwynne Vanderbilt.

Sad Blow to Newport.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, R. I., May 8.—All sorts of people in Newport and about Portsmouth, where the Vanderbilt farm is situated, talked of nothing today but the death of Alfred G. Vanderbilt. Mr. Vanderbilt, like his mother, Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who gave the Newport Hospital, the Vanderbilt Ward, and a memorial window in Trinity Church as memorials to her husband was generous to Newport. He gave the Young Men's Christian Association a fine new home a few years ago as a memorial for his father. He was a member of the Newport Casino, the Reading Room, the Newport Fishing Club, the Casino Club, and the Bailey Beach Association, and one of the large exhibitors at the Newport Horse Show and at the fairs of the Newport County Agricultural Association in Middletown.

All his life Mr. Vanderbilt had lived much here and at Oakland Farm, which passed to his ownership when his father died. Driving a four-in-hand through Newport was one of his pleasures, and he earned the title of Newport's best whip. It was Mr. Vanderbilt who revived coaching in England with his coaches Viking and Venture, which he drove from London to Brighton from Spring to July. He maintained a residence and stables in London where his coaching horses were taken by the British army for war purposes, and one of the noted house boats on the Thames was owned by him. Recently he purchased the steam yacht Warrior from his uncle, Frederick W. Vanderbilt, and changed the name to Wayfarer, the same as his car. Many messages of sympathy went to Mrs. Vanderbilt from Newport and Portsmouth today.

May Affect Newport Season.

That the Newport season will be affected by Mr. Vanderbilt's death is probable because so many of the Vanderbilt family were to be here.

The death of Frederick Martin Davies in New York was not known to Mr. Vanderbilt, as he was on the sea at the time. The strongest friendship existed between these two men, who graduated from Yale together and had been chums ever since.

Horses from Oakland Farm which were started on the horseshow circuit in Washington this week by Manager Charles H. Wilson will be withdrawn.

Mr. Vanderbilt's first son, Master William H. Vanderbilt, is with his mother, Mrs. French Vanderbilt, at Harbour View.

SAYS 3 TORPEDOES STRUCK.

Cabin Steward Says Passengers Kept Cool in Face of Death.

QUEENSTOWN, May 8.—A cabin steward of the Lusitania today gave this account of the sinking of the vessel:

"The passengers, a large number of whom were seriously injured by the explosion of the torpedoes and by splinters from the wreckage, were all at luncheon. The weather was beautifully clear and calm. We were going at about 16 knots and were seven or eight miles south of Galleyhead when we were struck by one torpedo, and, in a minute or two afterward, by two more.

"The first explosion staggered us and the others finished us, shattering the gigantic ship. The Lusitania disappeared forever in twenty minutes after the first torpedo struck.

"It was a terrible sight, but the passengers were surprisingly cool.

"Nearly all the first-class passengers were drowned. Most of those saved were second and third class passengers.

"We did not get a moment's notice from the submarine. It appeared suddenly above the surface, on our starboard bow, and discharged a torpedo at us. The submarine disappeared as suddenly as it came into view.

"We saw the track the torpedo made in the water, and we got it fairly amidship. The Lusitania listed forward and started to settle. Then the submerged submarine discharged two more torpedoes, which also struck us, and our ship sank in twenty minutes.

"After the submarine dived it was not seen again. It went off after accomplishing its work and did not attempt to save men, women, or children, but left them to drown like rats in a trap when the great ship sank like a stone.

"The scene was a frightful one as the ship went down. A great many persons were carried down at once by the suction of the big vessel. About 100 persons jumped overboard and clung to floating wreckage or upturned boats, which were blown off the ship by the explosion.

"One of the cabin passengers, a Greek woman, was rescued after swimming a long distance in a sweater and trousers lent to her by a sailor. She fears her husband was drowned.

CANADIAN PRESS ASKS UNITED STATES TO ACT

Editors Call on President Wilson to Declare War on "the Mad Dog of Europe."

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, May 8.—Canadian editors in discussing the Lusitania disaster are practically unanimous in calling upon the United States to make war on Germany.

"What effect will this deliberate destruction of hundreds of American citizens in cold blood have upon public sentiment?" asks Sir John Willison of The Toronto News, who is the Canadian correspondent of The London Times.

"Can President Wilson forever stand aside while international law and international moral standards are cast to the winds by a brutal and infuriated people?

"If the American Republic continues to hold aloof, what standing will it have at the close of the war? If it persistently ignores continuous breaches of international agreements and conventions, what weight will it hereafter possess in the councils of the nations? What right will it have to participate in the peace settlement which will terminate the war?"

The Toronto Telegram says:

"The people of the United States may well hold President Wilson to a strict accountability. The passive attitude adopted by Washington in the face of continued floutings indisputably encouraged the Germans to the ruthless slaughter of scores of American citizens.

"The blood of these murdered victims cries for vengeance. If that cry is unheard, the people of the United States will always bear upon them the stigma of the greatest humiliation ever put upon a nation.

"If they tamely submit to the murder of their own flesh and blood, it would be to confess that in the United States is no spirit of manhood. The Stars upon Old Glory are obscured by the mire that the Huns have flung upon it. An indelible stain will remain if that mire is not speedily cleaned away."

The Toronto Star says:

"The crime that has occurred was planned, was known at the German Embassy in Washington, was known to the person or persons who sent those anonymous telegrams.

"What will the United States do about it? Here is the United States, the greatest of neutral nations, with the lives of her own people being sacrificed along with the non-combatants of other countries. * * * Can she any longer continue her amiable effort to so act as to please everybody and offend nobody while the world is being pulled down about her ears?"

The Toronto World, after recalling President Wilson's statements in February that, in event of loss of American lives, he "would take any steps it might be necessary to take to safeguard American lives and property," adds that it will be interesting to know whether President Wilson and his State Department will act up to the letter and spirit of these brave words.

The Toronto Mail says: "The Washington Government cannot let these American citizens, who rely on its protection, go unavenged."

J. A. MacDonald, editor of The Globe, says: "But what of the United States? Does President Wilson propose to let German submarines destroy the lives of American citizens because they choose to cross the Atlantic in a passenger ship flying the British flag? Does he still think the mad dog of Europe can be trusted at large? Is it not almost time to join in hunting down the brute?"

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ontario, May 8.—Commenting on the position of the United States as a result of the Lusitania disaster, The Ottawa Journal says, editorially:

"Scores of innocent American lives were murdered by the Germans yesterday. President Wilson's note was a mere 'scrap of paper' to Berlin. The American nation has been insulted and outraged. The honor of the United States is at stake. Her Anglo-Saxon heritage is challenged. The eyes of the world are fixed upon America. If we know anything of the character of her people, they will not fail in this crisis in their history."

OUST NATURALIZED GERMANS.

British Members of Stock Exchange Show Feeling Over Lusitania.

LONDON, May 8.—The feeling of resentment against Germany over the torpedoing of the Lusitania was so strong on the Stock Exchange this morning that the British members united and turned all their fellow-members of German origin, and also all German clerks, bodily out of the house.

The British members have arranged to have petitions put up in every market on Monday asking the committee to exclude all such members from the house, and this in spite of the fact that the members of German origin all have naturalization papers.

The wear and tear on the human body is so great that repairs must be constantly made to render the destructive process as slow as possible, and insure a reasonably long and healthful life.

The medical profession agree that no one thing hastens the deterioration of our organic life more than intestinal poisons—caused by malevolent microbes thriving in the lower digestive tract—which are absorbed by the blood, and gradually reach the vital organs, resulting in serious degeneration in the human system.

From these conditions arise serious diseases of the stomach and nervous system, biliousness, skin disorders and general indications of weakened vitality. The ingredients contained in offer a remedial agent which tends to check and destroy these dangerous poisons and adds zest to life and efficiency to your daily efforts. These tablets are derived from sour milk ferments of Bulgaria—where the natives frequently live to be 125 years old—and contain the Bacillus Bulgaricus and Glyco-Bakter—the Bacilli of Long Life—combined in accordance with the instructions of the famous scientists of the Institute Pasteur, Paris, and endorsed by Bouchard, Massol, Tissier, Grigeroff and Combe.

SINKING JUSTIFIED, SAYS DR. DERNBURG

Lusitania a "War Vessel," Known to be Carrying Contraband, Hence Search Was Not Necessary.

'AMERICANS USED AS CLOAK'

But Were Amply Warned—German Agent Also Upholds Hidden Attack on the Gulflight.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, May 8.—Justification of the sinking of the liner Lusitania by German submarinas as a man of war was advanced today by Dr. Bernhard Dernburg, former German Colonial Secretary and regarded as the Kaiser's official mouthpiece in the United States. Dr. Dernburg gave out a statement at the Hollenden Hotel following his arrival in Cleveland to address the City Club at noon on Germany's attitude in the present war.

Because the Lusitania carried contraband of war and also because she was classed as an auxiliary cruiser and was at the disposal of the British Admiralty, Germany had a right to destroy her regardless of the passengers, which included nearly 200 Americans, Dr. Dernburg said. Warnings given by the German Embassy in public advertisement before the sailing of the Lusitania, he added, together with the note of Feb. 18, declaring the existence of war zones, relieved Germany from responsibility for the loss of the many Americans.

The blowing up of the American tank liner Gulflight, carrying a cargo of oil for France, also was characterized as justifiable by Dr. Dernburg.

Dr. Dernburg's Defense.

Dr. Dernburg's formal statement, regarded as highly important in view of the fact that he is recognized as the official spokesman in the United States of the Imperial German Government, follows:

Great Britain declared the North Sea a war zone in the Winter. No protest was made by the United States or any neutral. Great Britain held up all neutral ships carrying non-contraband goods, detaining them, buying or confiscating their cargoes.

Great Britain constantly changed the contraband lists so no foodstuffs of any kind have actually reached Germany since the war began. International law says foodstuffs destined for the civil population must pas. It does not recognize any right to starve out a whole people.

As a consequence, and in retaliation, Germany declared the waters around England a war zone, and started a submarine warfare. It became known in February that British ships were flying the American flag as a protection.

Great Britain replied by officially declaring its purpose to starve 120,000,000 Germans and Austrians. The United States very thoughtfully tried to mediate, proposing that foodstuffs should be passed, and submarine warfare be stopped.

Germany agreed; England turned the proposal down. Then, in order to protect American passengers, they were warned by public advertisement of the danger of sailing under the flag of a belligerent.

Vessels carrying contraband of war are liable to destruction unless they can be taken to a port of the country that captures them. The right of search need not be exercised if it is certain such ships carry contraband.

Oil is contraband like war ammunition and all metals. The master of the Gulflight, (an American oil tank steamer sunk recently,) swore before custom officials to his cargo of oil for France.

The master of the Lusitania similarly swore to his manifest of cargo of metals and ammunition. Both the Gulflight and the Lusitania carried contraband when attacked, it is obvious.

The Lusitania's manifest showed she carried for Liverpool 260,000 pounds of brass; 60,000 pounds of copper; 189 cases of military goods; 1,271 cases of ammunition, and for London, 4,200 cases of cartridges.

Vessels of that kind can be seized and be destroyed under The Hague rules without any respect to a war zone. The Lusitania was a British auxiliary cruiser, a man of war. On the same day she sailed the Cameronia, another Cunarder, was commandeered in New York Harbor for military service.

The fact is that the Lusitania was a British war vessel under orders of the Admiralty to carry a cargo of contraband of war. The passengers had had full warning, first by the German note to England in February, second, by advertisement.

Germany wants to do anything reasonable so as not to make the United States or its citizens suffer in any way. But she cannot do so unless Americans will take necessary precautions to protect themselves from dangers of which they are cognizant.

What Germany has done, she has done by way of retaliation after her offer through President Wilson, regarding submarine warfare, was turned down and after Britain declared the war was directed toward the 120,000,000 innocent non-combatants, women and children.

Americans can do their own thinking when the faces are laid before them. I have really no authority to speak. But my mission in the United States is to inform your people of the German attitude. The German Ambassador, Count von Vernatorff, can speak only in official phrases. I talk straight out, bluntly.

Dr. Dernberg put much stress on the fact that the Cunard Line officials did not warn American passengers that the ship carried a large store of ammunition and other contraband of war.

Americans a "Cloak."

"Did they issue a warning? I would like an answer," said Dr. Dernburg. "If that warning was not given, American passengers were being used as a cloak for England's war shipments.

"It is not reasonable that such a vessel could not be sunk because there were American passengers on board. They had been warned by Germany of the danger.

"England could hire one American to travel to and fro on each of her ships, carry on shipments of arms, and place her men of war anywhere, if American passengers can be used as shields."

Asked whether he expected action by the United States, because of the Lusitania's sinking, Dr. Dernburg said:

"That is a question I cannot discuss. I can only say that any ship flying the American flag and not carrying contraband of war, is and will be as safe as a cradle. But any other ship, not so exempt, is as unsafe as a volcano—or as was the Lusitania."

Dr. Dernburg merely raised his eyebrows when he was told the Transylvania, another Cunard liner, sailed from New York on Friday night to cover the same route as the Lusitania.

"I can only say that the German warnings will appear henceforth by advertisement. That is significant."

Dr. Dernburg termed "irrelevant" the report that the Lusitania, at the moment of her sinking, was flying the American flag.

"The Germans know there is no American vessel of her size," he pointed out. "Germany, and I, very much regret if there was loss of life in the liner's sinking."

BERLIN HAILS NEW TRIUMPH.

Hundreds of Telegrams Congratulate Admiral von Tirpitz.

LONDON, May 8.—The Exchange Telegraph Company has received today the following telegram from Copenhagen:

"Berlin newspapers print the news of the sinking of the Lusitania in colossal type and hail the successful torpedoing of the ship as a new triumph for Germany's naval policy. The general impression is that England has got what she deserves."

The Exchange Telegraph Company has received a dispatch from Berlin, by way of Amsterdam, which reads as follows:

"Hundreds of telegrams of congratulation are being sent to Admiral von Tirpitz, the German Minister of Marine, on the sinking of the Lusitania, which is considered by the Germans to be an answer to the destruction off the Falkland Islands of the German squadron under the command of Admiral von Spee.

"The news of the loss of the Lusitania only became generally known to the public this morning. It was received with mixed expressions of amazement and enthusiasm. The newspapers praise the pluck and daring of the submarine crew."

The General News correspondent at Amsterdam quotes The Cologne Gazette as deprecating the drowning of non-combatants, and saying further:

"The news will be received by the German people with unanimous satisfaction, since it proves to England and the whole world that Germany is quite in earnest in regard to her submarine warfare. This weapon of ours may hit the enemy as terribly and as painfully as the 42-centimeter guns. Indeed it is a more terrible menace.

"England now knows that our submarines will not allow the best and most valuable prizes to escape their attacks, but will continue to destroy them whenever they meet them. The English, of course, will make a terrible cry about this so-called barbarous method of warfare by Germans, but will say nothing about the great quantity of war material for England and her allies which was on board the Lusitania.

"Moreover, at least two guns of 12 centimeters were mounted on the liner, which was so equipped as to be able to inflict mortal injury on any submarine she might be able to get near. This made it impossible for submarines to take any steps to save the passengers before torpedoing the ship." [The charge that the Lusitania carried guns is officially denied by the British Admiralty.]

IMPEACH BRYAN, SAYS VIERECK

George S. Viereck, publisher of The Fatherland, yesterday gave out the following statement on the sinking of the Lusitania:

"The current number of The Fatherland, printed several days before the disaster that has overtaken the Lusitania, in discussing the fate of another ship torpedoed by a German submarine, contains the following prediction:

"'Before long a large passenger ship like the Lusitania, carrying implements of murder to Great Britain, will meet with a similar fate. If an American is foolish enough to intrust his life to an English ship, in spite of the explicit warning of the German Embassy he has only himself to blame if he meets with serious mishap.

"'Some time ago Mr. Bryan warned all Americans to keep away from the Mexican war zone. If Mr. Bryan were not utterly neglectful of his duties he would long ago have issued a warning both to American merchantmen and to passengers embarking for Europe to keep away from the war zone described by the German Government around England.

"'Germany is merely retaliating against the lawlessness of Great Britain. We have ignominiously accepted the arbitrary paper blockade of the Allies. We cannot now wave the American flag in the face of Germany.'

"Now that my prophecy has come true, I can only repeat what I have said editorially. Much as I regret the staggering loss of life, the facts absolutely justify the action of the Germans if the Lusitania was, indeed, torpedoed by a German submarine. Legally and morally there is no basis for any protest on the part of the United States. The Lusitania was a British ship. British ships have been instructed by the Admiralty to ram submarines and to take active measures against the enemy. Hence every British ship must be considered in the light of a warship.

"The Lusitania flew the ensign of the British Naval Reserves before the submarine warfare was initiated. Since that time she has hoisted many a flag, including the Stars and Stripes. She was under orders to fly either no flag or a neutral flag on that fatal trip. According to a statement issued by the advertising manager of the Cunard Line, the Lusitania when torpedoed was entirely out of the control of the Cunard Company and operated under the command of the British Admiralty.'

"The Lusitania carried contraband of war from this country to England. If this contraband had reached its destination it could undoubtedly have killed far more Germans than the total number of passengers lost on the Lusitania. As a matter of fact, it did actually kill the passengers by precipitating the sinking of the ship.

"It cannot be said that the Lusitania was torpedoed without warning. Ordinarily a half hour's warning is regarded sufficient. In this case the ship was warned of its fate four or five days in advance. We need only turn to the warning notice issued by the German Embassy on the day before the Lusitania left the harbor of New York.

"Instead of urging the President to take steps against Germany, we should impeach the Secretary of State for his neglect of duty in not warning all Americans of the peril of ocean traffic in the war zone, especially under the flag of a belligerent nation. If the Secretary of State, in accordance with the Mexican precedent, had issued such a warning, not a single American life would have been forfeited.

"Germany, provoked by England, which established a war zone as early as November and made the importation of foodstuffs into Germany practically impossible, decided upon a submarine warfare as a measure of retaliation. She was forced to do so by the signal failure of the United States to protect the common rights of neutrals. When Germany determines upon a plan of action she means business. The Germans are not a nation of poker players. Germany does not bluff.

"The sinking of the Lusitania is a terrific lesson, but in order to drive home its force more fully and to safeguard this country from further losses and from the danger of complications with Germany, the State Department should issue at once a formal notice admonishing American citizens to shun all ships flying the flag of a belligerent nation and all ships, irrespective of nationality, which carry across the sea the tools of destruction.

"I have just completed a canvass of the German-American publishers in this country. I think, therefore, that in thus stating the attitude of The Fatherland, I also voice the attitude of almost every German-American publisher in this country."

THINKS AMERICA "IMPOTENT."

Frankfurter Zeitung Counts on German Element Here.

The possibilities of a war between the United States and Germany in case of the destruction of an American merchant ship or the loss of American lives through the German submarines in the war zone, are deprecated as little more than ludicrous, in the Frankfurter Zeitung of April 6, which discusses President Wilson's warning that he would hold Germany accountable in such an event.

"That Germania has lost a great part of her children to America has often been painfully felt over there," says the paper, which publishes its comment under a New York date line. "But the emigration has also its brighter side for the old homeland, and the last few days have given proof of that. When, after the announcement of the German military authorities concerning the war zone, President Wilson spoke in big tones about about the 'strictest accountability' which he would insist upon in case an American ship should be torpedoed, some of the newspapers discussed what might follow such an event.

"To be sure, they did not wish to admit, what was clear and palpable, but the manner and method in which the debate was conducted permitted it to be seen at once that a war between Germany and America, belonged, so to speak, to the impossible. Now as well as hereafter.

"At present America would be impotent anyway to undertake anything against Germany, for what America can do other powers can do much better. As a matter of fact, in a war, Uncle Sam and the Austrians would at present do little more than make faces at one another. But the chief reason why a war would be unthinkable, is the presence of an enormous German element in the United States. What could be done, for instance, with the 3,000,000 German-speaking immigrants? And what with their 9,000,000 children? And their grandchildren who in many cases still think along German lines?

"And if now a war should break out, the hosts of Russian Jews and their children, as well as the Irishmen with their descendants, would increase the obstacle which would be met by a people that goes to war only half-heartedly. I do not mean to say that these elements of the population are not loyally minded toward their new country; but even in the Anglo-American newspapers one can see the realization glimmer that even if only some of these millions would have to be brought into concentration camps, the American Army would not be enough to watch over them."

DEPRECATES TALK OF WAR.

New Yorker Staats-Zeitung Condemns "Jingoistic Spirit."

The New Yorker Staats-Zeitung yesterday evening deprecated the possibility of war between this country and Germany as a result of the sinking of the Lusitania, saying, under the heading "The Lusitania's Sinking":

"If the same jingoistic spirit today ruled the nation as made use of the sinking of the Maine as a welcome excuse to lash President McKinley, Congress, and public opinion into a war that could have been avoided, the sinking of the Lusitania would have provided an opportunity for the same spirit. But America of 1915 is not the America of seventeen years ago. It has also learned something in the last nine months—what war may mean to a people. And so the passionate, wild tone of the press of New York, which speaks of 'War by Assassination' in THE TIMES and of 'Wholesale Murder' in Hearst's American today, may not be interpreted as showing that America is on the eve of a war with Germany because, unfortunately, with the British Lusitania hundreds of Americans, among them many well-known, prominent, useful citizens, had to lose their lives.

"Washington is—thanks, at least, to the fact that no sword-rattler rules in the White House—inclined to weigh matters carefully, to await the receipt of information, to find out what sank the Lusitania. And even if it should come to such a point that Congress, which alone has the right to declare war, should be convoked, the relations with the German Empire and people may become strained, but there will never be a break. * * * United States Senator Stone, who is at the head of the important Committee on Foreign Affairs, says: 'The loss of the splendid ship, the Queen of the Seas, lamentable as that is, does not as such concern the United States. The Lusitania was a British ship. Our concern is for the Americans that were passengers upon her.'

"If all Americans were saved, the sinking of the Lusitania—whose commander and owner consciously disregarded all warnings and smilingly declared, in the tone of the Captain of the Titanic, upon their departure: 'Would like to see the Germans that would dare to come up to a ship so fast and so well prepared for every sort of attack'—might have been hailed as a masterpiece of boldest warfare against a nation that had ceased to be mistress of the seas. But now the loss of the many Americans takes away much of the satisfaction. And still, if they again revert to the accusations against the Germans, who are defending themselves with all means in their disposal against the starvation that has been threatened them, the defense among just and unprejudiced Americans may not be gagged, even in the face of the loss of non-combatants. They had been warned. On their own risk, in foolish trust in the power of England that had for decades played the bluff of being unrestricted rulers of the sea, they depended upon the Union Jack, which is a signal to every German submarine for daring attack. Whether millionaires, shippers of arms, men and women of prominent society—war is no respecter of persons—all men are equal before the law of self-defense.'

"Lamentable as is the loss of so many useful human lives, even the sinking of the Lusitania could have its good side; might become the great penetrating lesson for the American people. In the misfortune, in the tears in thousands of families of America, it may realize the extent of the misery, the death by starvation which the people under whose flag the Lusitania sailed wished to provide for the 70,000,000 women and children in the German Empire. To ward off such misfortune, indeed, a Lusitania had to be sacrificed."

CALLED MURDER IN HOLLAND.

Amsterdam Editors Beg Neutrals to Halt Germany.

AMSTERDAM, (via London,) May 8.—"The torpedoing of the Lusitania," says the Telegraaf in an editorial, "was a deliberately staged reproduction of the Titanic disaster. It was a premeditated crime against a passenger ship on which were 2,500 non-combatants. It is no longer outrageous; it has become fiendish.

"Does there still exist something like conscience among the neutrals? The neutral powers remained silent when Belgium's neutrality was trampled upon, when the Germans carried out practices profaning international law, and when submarine assassins took their first victims. Will they now look on inactively?

"Only the spontaneous joint protest of the entire civilized world from which Germany has separated herself can be an answer to the latest provocation."

The Handelsblad says:

"The torpedoing of the Lusitania has caused a profound impression here. A people such as ours, that always has been a seafaring people, has the right, and it is its duty, to express its indignation at the barbarous manner of the German warfare on the sea, which violates that which always has been respected.

"Recently the Germans sank more than twenty defenseless fishing boats. Now without warning they sink a big mail steamer, the Lusitania. This act is opposed to every law and every sentiment of humanity. We raise our voice, however powerless it may be, in protest. A seafaring people that has any self-respect does not make a war of annihilation upon defenseless people."

The Tijd says:

"Neutrals who in these lamentable times have so often imposed restraint upon themselves in order to silence their feelings of horror and indignation must now acknowledge that another incident can be added to all the previous violations of laws, to the atrocious interpretations of treaties, and to the inhuman and devilish contrivances which Germany has been guilty of using in committing murder on a great scale.

"The commander of the German submarine which sank the Lusitania can look with pride upon his work. Is not this so, Satan?"

"There is no German living who will not regret this incident and pity the travelers drowned. They, however, are responsible for their own ruin, since they trusted themselves to a vessel which, it was well known, would pass through waters Germany had announced were the scenes of submarine warfare. If many Americans, and some Americans of high position, suffered by the destruction of the Lusitania, we are doubly sorry, but it was their own fault."

ROOT GRAVELY SILENT.

Ex-Senator Says He Feels That He "Should Say Nothing."

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, N. Y., May 8.—Ex-Senator Elihu Root, President of the Constitutional Convention, received with evident concern from THE TIMES correspondent reports of the sinking of the Lusitania indicating that the number of dead was much larger than early news had indicated. He declined to comment or to give an opinion on the probable effect the loss of many American lives would have on the future relations between this country and Germany.

"I feel that I should say nothing," said Mr. Root gravely.

WEEP FOR THE DEAD AS BULLETINS GO UP

Steady Stream of Anxious Inquirers at the Cunard Line Offices All Day.

PROMINENT PERSONS CALL

Woman, Getting No News of Fiance, Faints—Man Grieves for His Wife and Son.

When the Cunard Line office opened at 7:45 o'clock yesterday morning there was a group of anxious persons standing outside the doors. Although there was not a large crowd at any time at the office, a continual stream of persons called, all with inquiries about the Lusitania's passengers or crew. These inquiries were supplemented by a steady shower of telegrams from all over the country. Some were sent from Canada. While the employes were busy revising lists and answering questions the jingle of telephone bells played an accompaniment.

Before the clerks could give any definite replies as to who had been saved they had to go and examine carefully the cablegrams which had arrived after midnight. These continued at intervals all day, each giving a fragment of information as to the whereabouts of passengers.

The first message received at the line and made public was from the head office at Liverpool. It read:

A telegram to the following effect has been received from the Admiral at Queenstown: Torpedo boats, tugs, and armed trawlers from Queenstown are all in except the Heron. Landed from these were 695 survivors and 40 dead. Landed from steamers, 82 survivors. Landed at Kinsale, 11 survivors; 5 dead. Total survivors, 658; dead, 45. Numbers will be verified later. Possible Kinsale fishing boat may have a few more.

Only a few first cabin passengers saved. It is understood they thought the ship would float. She sank in from fifteen to twenty-five minutes, and it was reported she was struck by two torpedoes. In addition to the foregoing it is just signaled that one armed trawler, probably the Heron, and two fishing trawlers are bringing in 100 bodies.

Survivors At Queenstown.

It was after 10 o'clock in the morning when the second cablegram received from Liverpool was posted. This was at once surrounded by the seekers after late news. It read:

Queenstown wires all passengers for Liverpool are now at station waiting for 3 o'clock connection for Holyhead. Will send you a complete list as soon as we can get it ready.

This promise of the latest list of survivors kept many about the office nearly all day, for it was not until late that the company gave out revised lists of the survivors among the passengers and crew. As fast as information arrived from Liverpool, clerks gave every one the benefit of the latest information. The Queenstown message would indicate, the clerks pointed out, that the first passengers landed on the Irish coast were in the station at Queenstown and were ready to leave for England and would arrive in London about 8 o'clock this morning.

By this time the crowd numbered about 150 persons in both the first cabin, second cabin, and steerage offices. This was the greatest crowd of the day, and included about half a hundred reporters. Most of the men and women who made inquiries for relatives or friends were very quiet, but a few manifested outward signs of grief. One woman fainted in the morning. Another became almost hysterical and several asked questions with tears streaming down their faces. Some sobbed with relief when they heard the names of loved ones read off in the list of those saved.

"You will have to wait for further news," was the often spoken advise, and frequently the persons spoken to retired to the row of benches along the wall to sit in dejection waiting, waiting for the news that in many cases never came.

"Your friend is not on the list of those saved," a clerk would say, and always as the inuirer turned away there would be a word of comfort in "no news is good news."

Just before noon an atractive looking young woman entered the office. She said she was Miss Gertrude Olgarden of 223 West 112th Street. She was very much agitated, her agitation increased so that she could hardly speak. She asked if Louis Brilly, a second cabin passenger, had been saved. The clerk turned away and examined the list.

"I am sorry," he said, "but his name does not appear on our list."

Woman Inquirer Faints.

Miss Olgarden threw up her hands as she leaned across the counter, shrieked and fainted. Several persons, among whom was a physician, carried the unconscious young woman to a settee, where they revived her by bathing her head and chaffing her hands. When she recovered she wept hysterically. She explained that Mr. Brilly was her fiance and they were to have been married on June 1, after he had closed a business deal in London.

The clerks tried to comfort her with the hope that his name might appear on the revised list of survivors and there was a possibility he might have been saved by some small boat now yet in port. They promised to let her know late news.

Another pathetic figure in the Cunard office, who sat for two hours, with tears running down his checks, was James Kay of 852 Rhinelander Avenue, the Bronx. He came to inquire for his wife and his son, Robert, 8 years old, who were in the second cabin. They were unaccounted for. His daughter, Margaret, who accompanied him, also was overcome by grief, and she was assisted to a bench in a corner, where she sobbed unrestrainedly.

An early caller at the office was Howard C. Brokaw of Brokaw Brothers, who enquired regarding two of the firm's woolen buyers, James Leary of Brooklyn and T. B. King of Rye, N. Y. He said he had received an unsigned cable reading, "Saved. Everything lost. No money."

The office could give him no news of the buyers at that time. Mr. Brokaw said he believed that if only one had got ashore he was Mr. Leary, because Mrs. Leary had received the same unsigned cable message.

F. J. Saunders, manager of John Dewar & Sons at 50 Bank Street, spent the morning in the office anxiously waiting for news of Alexander Campbell, general manager of the company. Mr. Campbell was on his way home from a voyage through India and Australia. Mr. Saunders was accompanied by Miss Friend. Mr. Campbell's sister-in-law, who lives at the Studio Club.

In an interview with a TIMES reporter Mr. Saunders said:

"We are very anxions for news and have cabled to the other side to the head office of our firm, but have had no reply. Mr. Campbell had intended to sail on the American liner New York on May 1, but changed his mind to go on the Lusitania, as he had several friends among the passengers, and she was expected to arrive thirty-six hours earlier at Liverpool.

Jested About Danger.

"I spoke to him just before the Lusitania sailed about the chances of her being overtaken by a submarine and torpedoed. He treated my remark in a humorous manner by turning to the bedroom steward with the remark, 'Have you got plenty of lifeboats here?' The steward laughed and replied, 'You don't want any life belts on this ship, Sir. We can run away from anything the Germans have afloat.'

"On his journey through India Mr. Campbell contracted jungle fever, and this was followed by a mild attack of typhoid in China. He was not very robust physically and could not swim, so I am very much afraid that his chances of being alive are very slim."

Among the women who came alone to the office in the forenoon was Miss Hilda Spong, the actress, who inquired after James McCubbin, the purser of the Lusitania, whom she had known for a great many years.

"I was very much upset," she said, "to hear that Mr. McCubbin had gone down with his ship. My fears were confirmed when I did not see his name among the list of the crew who were saved. He had spent all his life at sea working hard, and this was to have been his last voyage. Two days before the Lusitania sailed he told me, with great joy, that he had purchased a small farm near Golders Green, about twenty miles from London. There he intended to spend the remainder of his days in peace."

Another actress who called at the office was Miss Bertha Kalich, who inquired after her friend Miss Rita Jolivet, a French actress, who had been playing in New York. When she was informed that the name could not be found on any of the lists of survivors, Miss Kalich burst into tears. She had to remain in the office for fifteen minutes until she recovered her composure sufficiently to allow her to depart.

In that stream of inquirers htat passed into the office in the early afternoon was G. S. Lindgren of the local Weather Bureau. He was seeking some word as to the safety of his sister, Mrs. Aubry Miller of 602 West 137th Street. She was bound for Glasgow, he said, to visit her husband's relatives. Mr. Miller died three months ago and it had been his wish that his wife meet his relatives.

One of those who was saved when the Lusitania went down was Charles W. Bowring of Bowring & Co., owners of the Red Cross Line, 17 Battery Place, whose steamers ply between New York and St. Johns, Newfoundland. His safety was made known in this cable received by his wife at her home, 160 East Seventy-fourth Street, at 11 A. M.:

QUEENSTOWN, May 8.—Torpedoed without warning, port side. Jumped overboard, starboard side. In water four hours. No ill effects. Queens Hotel.
C. W. BOWRING.

Mr. Bowring is President of the St. George's Society in New York and is also in charge of the Prince of Wales Relief Fund in America. He went abroad on business.

Revised Lists Given Out.

About 3 o'clock in the afternoon the Cunard Line gave out a second list of the numbers they believed to be saved and revised figures as to those on the Lusitania. At that time they reported the list of survivors contained the names of 87 first cabin, 72 second cabin, 33 third class, 52 of the crew, and 6 unclasified. This number, they announced, was not to be taken as complete. The revised list of those on board was given out thus: Saloon, 290; second cabin, 590; third class, 361, and crew, 667.

Mr. and Mrs. P. Pennycook of 260 Eleventh Street, Hoboken, called to inquire about Mrs. A. Pirie and her two children. They were on their way to Glasgow. The family were among those who had intended to sail on the Anchor liner Cameronia.

In the crowd that passed at times up and down the hall outside the passenger offices were a young man and two tearful women. They inquired about Samuel Friedman of 1,531 Fifty-first Street, Brooklyn, who was in business with his father and brother at 491 Broadway. The young man was the brother and he said that Samuel Friedman had gone abroad on business.

In the afternon rumors were circulated that the American liner New York had been torpedoed off the Irish coast. This caused considerable excitement among the people waiting. The rumor was promptly discredited b ya cable message from Liverpool that the New York would reach that port at 5 P. M. today.

Allowing fifteen hours' steaming time from Cape Clear, on the Irish coast, the New York would not reach the danger zone until midnight, or about 7 last night, New York time.

"I had booked passage and was to have sailed yesterday on the Transylvania," Mr. Hare said, "and heard the news of the Lusitania when I got to the pier. Several of the ship's officers assured me that the affair was a joke, and that the Lusitania could not have been torpedoed. I did not think it a joke because my sister Elizabeth was on board, and I have had no word of her. I canceled my passage before the Transylvania sailed."

Mr. Hare's sister sailed to visit her parents in Tuam, County Galway, Ireland. He was to have joined her there.

The Rev. Edward B. Smith, Chaplain of Governor's Island, inquired for news of Major Gen. F. Warren Pearl, who sailed with his wife, three children, and two maids. Mr. Smith had been sent by officers from Governor's Island. Major Gen. Smith retired from the army after the Spanish-American war to practice medicine. At the offices of the Foreign Legion, it was reported that he had been saved but this was unconfirmed.

Inquirers for Gem Merchant.

Harry Niemark of Belgium anxiously awaited word of his father, Abraham, who was before the German invasion a diamond merchant of Antwerp, and who had sailed for London with diamonds. Before the Lusitania left her pier he gave them into the keeping of the purser. The elder Mr. Niemark's family fled to London when the Germans captured Antwerp. Harry Niemark and his father came to New York three months ago, leaving their mother and sisters in London. They took rooms at 97 Division Street and a few weeks ago the father decided to return to London and dispose of the diamonds.

James Turner of Lansing, Michigan, sought news of his brother, Scott Turner, a civil engineer, who had booked on the Cunarder at the very last minute.

One of the inquirers who paid four or five visits to the office during the day was a young Englishman, who said his wife and baby were on the Lusitania, but declined to give his name to the reporters.

The Cunard agents were notified by the relatives of Mr. and Mrs. E. Blish Thompson of Indiana, first cabin passengers, that they had received cables telling of the safety of both.

Joseph Tibbetts, a steamship agent of Newark, said he had been unable to get any word of eight passengers he had booked, all Trenton residents—A. H. Foley, Mrs. Anna Barker and daughter, Mrs. Louise Bramme and daughter, Mr. and Mrs. Francis Fox, and John H. Reid. Fox and Reid are master mechanics and were going to work at the Woolwich Arsenal in the manufacture of artillery.

Another visitor at the office was Mrs. M. Bate and her daughter Eleanor of Victoria, B. C., who canceled their passage on the Cunard Line and announced they intended to sail by the American Line to nurse Mrs. Bate's son who had been shot in France.

A well-dressed, middle-aged man who asked about the safety of Edwin W. Friend of Farmington, Conn., and Miss Theodate Pope, was informed that Miss Pope was safe and that Mr. Friend was not on the list of survivors.

"I knew he was dead before I came in here," he said as he turned away.

One of the passenger agents said that Mr. Friend had been secretary of the American Society for Psychical Research, and Miss Pope is one of the Directors.

Among the many telephone messages received were many from members of the theatrical profession asking about Charles Frohman.

SAVED BY CHANGING SHIPS.

Clergyman Going to See Son Off to War Heeded German Warning.

Special to The New York Times.

BENNINGTON, Vt., May 8.—When the news of the sinking of the Lusitania was received here it was generally believed that the Rev. W. M. Warlow, rector of St. James Episcopal Church in he adjoining town of Arlington, was among those who went down with the liner. He had gone to New York last week with the intention of taking passage on the Lusitania, but when he read the warnings in the newspapers he changed his booking to the New York of the American Line.

Before leaving for New York the rector told several of his parishoners that he dreaded the trip. He is a native of England and his only so, an officer in the British Army, is now stationed in Ireland. In order that he might see the young man before he was ordered to the Continent he took a two months' vacation.

SUBMARINES ALTER MARINE WAR CODE

American Admiral Thinks Powers Must Reach an Agreement Regarding Their Use.

ALL NEUTRALS IN PERIL

Under-Water Craft, Acting as Blockaders, a Menace to Everything Afloat.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—An Admiral of the United States Navy, whose name is well known in this country and abroad, said today that the fate of the Lusitania would compel the powers ultimately to come to a clear agreement in regard to the use of the submarine.

"It has never been a part of our naval policy," said this officer, "to use the submarine in the way that it is being now employed by Germany. Our official definition of the function of the submarine has always been connected with the national defense. We have discussed their use in protecting our ports from naval attack by an enemy's ships, and we have considered the use of large, powerful submarines able to go far out to sea with the first line of defense, and there operate against the enemy's war vessels.

"The first submarines we built, however, were intended solely for use at short ranges in co-operation with our seacoast defenses in and just outside our harbors. I have never seen in any technical military paper or in any discussion of the submarine at the Navy War College or in hearings before the committees of Congress a plan of using submarines for the purpose of maintaining a blockade or for preying on an enemy's commerce. In the present war Germany is a law unto herself in this respect, and it must be admitted that, if her claim that the submarine may be used to maintain a general blockade such as was declared in February is admitted, there is force in the plea that the old rule as to giving notice must necessarily be broken.

"When, during the civil war, we maintained a blockade of the entire seacoast of the Southern States, we did so at the great cost of buying more than 700 vessels to be used as warships on blockade duty. Thousands of miles of coast line was patrolled, and the blockade was maintained effectively and contributed to the final result in a most powerful way.

"But we never attacked a merchant vessel in the manner in which the German submarines have been doing. The vessel that attempted to run the blockade was hailed in the usual manner, and if no satisfactory explanation of her voyage was forthcoming, she was taken in charge and her passengers and crew were dealt with according to the rules and useages of civilized warfare. No menace was ever offered to the lives of innocent passengers on even the worst blockade runners known.

"But it must be remembered that our war vessel was always in a position of superior strength, and ran no great risk in hailing a vessel suspected of a contraband purpose. The little German submarine, on the other hand, takes great risk in hailing a merchant vessel and probably in such a situation as that in the case of the Lusitania it was even more dangerous. In fact the Captain of a liner sailing recently announced that he would like to see not one submarine but a flotilla of them, and that if he did he would ram them and send them to the bottom. It is possible that this fact may have had an important effect on subsequent events.

"But the circumstance emphasizes that for the future conduct of war on sane and civilized lines of action, there must be an international agreement as to the submarine and the waters and conditions under which it may be used, together with very definite rules as to notification if the submarine is to be used as a commerce destroyer. All the interests of this country are against using the submarine in this way. It is practically impossible to preserve the rights of neutrals if the claim of Germany is conceded.

"Navy officers generally, I think, take the view that President Wilson has taken the right position in the protest made to Germany and they believe that the course now should be to stand squarely on that protest."

SAYS WE ARE UNNEUTRAL.

By Permitting Germany to Use This as a Base for Acts of War.

Charles Stewart Davison of 40 Wall Street wrote to Counselor Robert Lansing of the State Department yesterday, urging that Germany had undoubtedly taken the position that the torpedoing without warning of passenger vessels of nations with whom she was at war was a permissible act.

"Any act done by Germany which tends to or is intended to accomplish that result is therefore an act of war,' within the meaning of the German definition. It follows that the act of the German Embassy in publishing broadcast in the United States simultaneously with the sailing of the Lusitania a warning to American citizens not to travel between England and the United States on any English vessel, was 'an act of war,' (more Germanico,) and that the territory of the United States was thus used as 'a base of war.'

"The same advertisement has appeared in the press again today. It is a repetition of 'an act of war' within the United States, and a repetition of the use of the territory of the United States as 'a base of war.' It is also the most recent of a long series of 'acts of war,' using the territory of this neutral nation as 'a base,' which have been committed by Germany. The permitting thereof by us is an unneutral act. A failure on the part of the Chief Executive to take actual measures to prevent such 'acts of war,' with the territory of the United States as their base, tends directly to embroil this country with other nations and involve this country in responsibilities hereafter. It would therefore, unless the reasoning is defective at some points, constitute a high misdemeanor within the purview of Article II., Section 4, of the Constitution of the United States, relating to the removal of the Chief Executive."

LAIR OF THE SUBMARINES.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Much confidential information has reached here of late as to the operations of German submarines and their bases of action. One base for six powerful submarines is said to be situated off Cape Finisterre, the rocky projection at the northwest "shoulder" of Spain. That point commands a great sweep of the Atlantic leading to and from England and French ports. But it is said to serve mainly for a watch on the British trade route running south along the coast of Spain to the Mediterranean, this being the great British highway of commerce with East India via the Suez Canal. The base off Cape Finisterre is thought to be too far south to have been the one from which the submarine dashed to launch its torpedoes against the Lusitania.

Another base is thought to be in or about Bear Haven, in Bantry Bay, at the southwest extremity of Ireland, fifty miles due west of the zone of the sinking of the Lusitania. The Irish coast at that point is wild and ragged, with deep and desolate bays and covers affording unusual opportunities for hostile craft to escape the vigilance of British destroyers.

Before the war, German ships were in the habit of carrying on manoeuvres in these bays, until the British Government put a stop to them. There is little doubt that during these manoeuvres opportunity was afforded for charting the locality and establishing a prospective base for use in war.

WAR TALK IS FREE IN TIMES SQUARE.

German Orators Find the Tide Turn Against Them in Debates at the Bulletin Boards.

MANY CHALLENGES TO FIGHT

But the Crowd Is Too Dense to Permit Blows—Women Take Part in the Argument.

The largest crowds that have gathered in Times Square since the war began stood all yesterday and last night around the bulletins on The Times Building. Between 1,000 and 1,500 people on the average occupied the platform at the north end of the building and on either side in Broadway and Seventh Avenue.

Many were there to urge that the only course for this country was to declare war against Germany. The pro-German orators, a number of whom have not missed a day in Times Square since the war began, held, on the contrary, that the sinking of the Lusitania was justified, and that the warning advertisement by the German Embassy relieved the German Government of all responsibility. These conflicting views led to a great many more fist fights than usually occur in a day in Times Square, but none of the clashes were serious.

It was probably the first day, since the war began that the majority of the crowd was against Germany. Throughout the preceding months a number of Germans and Austrians of means and prominence have made a regular practice of arguing the Teutonic cause in Times Square. One of these is an Austrian importer, who comes with a lawyer's leather case filled with typewriteen excerpts from Jefferson on the subject of neutrality and paragraphs from newspapers and magazines. These he produces to prove his points, whenever one of his arguments is challenged. Then there are several Irish-Americans, who are rarely absent in the afternoon or evening from the platform in front of the bulletin board. They are nearly always the centre of a big group, and are the delight of several professionals who put the finishing touch to a harangue against the Allies by offering pamphlets for sale.

These form the skeleton of the Times Square crowd, and its body is made up under normal conditions largely of debaters, who have a German accent. That was all changed yesterday. Throughout the day the prevailing opinion among the various groups of arguers remained the same, though thier personnel changed, as some left and others came, and the German sympathizers seldom had control of a single group.

The anti-Germans sometimes took the position that the United States should declare war on Germany at once, and sometimes that the country could not do any more than protest, and that that would not make much impression on Germany. After the bulletin had gone up quoting Mr. Bryan to the effect that Americans at the time need not be advised not to "rock the boat," the Secretary's phrase was made much of by the advocates of peace.

"Don't rock the boat," was interjected freetently as a speaker demanded that we should go to war with Germany, but still more common even than this were the answering taunts. "If you say you are an American and talk like that you're a mighty poor one," or "If you go on like that you may find yourself in a detention camp before long."

Two extra policemen were stationed in Times Square last night, but were not very busy. There were more challenges than fights. Even when the will to fight was there, the jam was so tight that it was impossible to draw back an arm for a blow, and hostilities seldom got beyond light slaps, which proved nothing. In the evening a score or more of women joined the debating groups, and some had their say quite freely. Occasionally, however, they fled before the uncensored language of a few of the debaters.

Most of the prominent German cafés went through the day and evening quietly without demonstrations. At Luchow's the crowd was about the same in numbers and not more remarkable for enthusiasm than on previous nights. The same was true of the Kaiser Kellar, Hofbrau, and the Kaiserhof, the positions of which along Broadway give them a cosmopolitan character. The Bismarck at Eighty-sixth Street and Third Avenue was quiet.

FRIENDS HOPE AND DESPAIR.

Many Chicago Families Fail to Get News of Missing Members.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, May 8.—Hope and despair by turns today gripped Chicago households of which members or friends were passengers on the Lusitania. To only a few the cables brought good news.

Of Charles A. Plamondon no word came. Cablegrams to all the cities to which news dispatches said the rescued had been taken brought no answer. Late in the afternoon Harold M. Plamondon sent a cable to Charles T. Jeffery, who was reported safe in early dispatches, but no word came back. If no news reaches him tomorrow morning Harold Plamondon will join his brother Charles in New York. Their sister, Mrs. J. Henry Smith, lives in Newark, N. J.

At the home of William Mounsey of 4,420 La Porte Avenue, William Mounsey, Jr., waited in vain for news of his father, sister, and brother-in-law. Then came a cablegram telling him of the safety of his sister, Mrs. C. L. Lund, but it held no word of the fate of William Mounsey, Sr., or of Mr. Lund. It was a year ago that tidings were awaited of the fate of Mrs. Mounsey, believed to have gone down with the wreck of the Empress of Ireland on the St. Lawrence. It was to verify a report that Mrs. Mounsey was safe in England that Mr. Mounsey, Mrs. Lund, and her husband had sailed on the Lusitania.

A cablegram to Queenstown elicited no information for Robert D. Thorne, Vice President of Montgomery Ward & Co., whose mother-in-law, Mrs. Catherine E. Willey, was on the sunken liner.

"Arrived in Queenstown safe and well," was the cheering message that reached Alfred A. Austrian concerning his sister-in-law, Mrs. C. W. B. Bartlett, and Mr. Bartlett. A similar message was received by J. A. Rothschild of Rothschild & Co., a brother of Mrs. Bartlett.

The safety of Edwin M. Collis of the Commonwealth Edison Company was announced to Mrs. Collis at Riverside in the laconic cablegram, "Safe," from Queenstown.

Word of the safety of his brother, Dr. Howard Fisher of Washington, came early in the day to Walter L. Fisher of Chicago, former Secretary of the Interior. "Dr. Fisher was going to Belgium for hospital service," said Mr. Fisher. "He was accompanied by his wife's sister, Miss Dorothy Connor." Miss Connor's name appeared in the newspaper lists of the rescued.

The following cablegram was received by Ohan Stevens of 713 North Clark Street, from his son Thomas, who sailed on the Lusitania with a party of twelve other Persians to visit his grandparents: "Father am safe, Son Thomas."

The party of Persians was on its way to the scenes of recent Turkish massacres to learn the fate of relatives. In the party were John Jacob Baba, Ala Vard Yohan, Envin Yohnan, Aziz Ohanis, Nikola Kaperalia, Stephen Ohan, Pera Saejis and George, Frank and Abraham Baba. Johan Jacob and Frank Baba were reported safe in news dispatches, but no word has come to the north side Persian colony of the fate of any of the others. Ohan is a naturalized American citizen.

"It is a terrible blow to the Persians in Chicago," said Malik Hatam of 63 West Grand Avenue, "for on those who may be lost we depended for news of the wives, mothers, and sweethearts imperiled at home."

A cablegram, "I am safe," was received by A. P. Miacek from his uncle, Dr. Daniel Virgil Moore of Yankton, S. D. Similar word from Dr. Moore also came to E. E. Moore, general yard master for the Chicago Belt Railway, a brother of the surgeon, who was one of a party of American surgeons who had volunteered their services to the British War Office.

Officials of the Blish Milling Company in Seymour, Ind., received a cablegram announcing the safety of E. B. Thompson, Secretary and sales manager, and his wife.

LUSITANIA'S LOSS HITS STOCKS AGAIN

Slumps of from 2 to 5 Points Common, but Supporting Orders Buoy Market Up.

WAR TALK IS DISCOURAGED

Assurances from Washington Improve Sentiment, and the Closing Tone Is Firm.

The stock market yesterday gave further evidences of liquidation brought about by the sinking of the Lusitania, although no renewal of the violent decline on Friday made its appearance. It was evident from the opening gong to the close that supporting orders were in the market, and whenever particular stocks gave signs of marked weakness they were restored to an equilibrium by purchases in large lots. At the end of the session losses extending from 2 to nearly 5 points were rather common, with occasional declines of a greater extent than this. The standard issues, however, suffered for the most part only to the extent of good-sized fractions.

The opening brought severe setbacks for some of the issues which had been weakest on Friday. Westinghouse opened with 6,000 shares lumped in the first lot at prices extending from 82 to 85. At 82 the quotation was down a full 10 points from Friday's closing figure. Later steady buying carried the stock forward, and it ended the day with a net recession of a little more than 4 points. In Steel common 15,000 shares were down simultaneously at the start, with quotations ranging from 52 to 52½, as compared with 54¼ on Friday night. Thereafter the price advanced to 54¼, and closed at 53¾.

Sentiment in the Street was divided as to the influence on security values the sinking of the Lusitania would have if strong representations were made to Germany in regard to it. Brokers with affiliations in Washington received unofficial word in the morning to the effect that the Administration would discourage any talk of reprisals for the loss of American lives. Based largely upon this information, sentiment improved toward the end of the market session, and the closing tone was firm.

This was one of the messages received from Washington by a Governor of the Exchange, which was widely read on the floor:

The Administration will make every effort to discourage war or reprisal talk. The President does not regard the situation as more serious than the Gulflight case. No official statement likely today. The President will do nothing until the excitement blows over and all the facts are at hand. It is a certainty that this incident will not lead toward anything like war.

The President is not likely to call Congress in session, as that would only complicate matters. There is no basis in the situation for any alarm that would affect the stock market.

The statement of opinion was accompanied by the injunction that it was not official, but came from a source that pretty closely represented the Administration.

LLOYD GEORGE TO THE PRESS.

Quotes Lincoln's Words as to When the War Will End.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 8. — David Lloyd George spoke last night at the annual dinner for the Newspaper Press Fund. He arrived late, just in time to make his address before the company separated. It was not a joyous banquet. The sinking of the Lusitania filled every mind and most people expected the Chancellor to refer to that news, but he did not and the THE NEW YORK TIMES correspondent was informed that he deliberately refrained from making any allusion to the tragedy. His audience derived the impression that, as one present put it, "official reticence at the moment and until all the facts are known best beseemed a British Minister, for the true word in this matter rests with America."

Many outbursts of applause marked this, one of the most ringing speeches Lloyd George has made in his whole career. His reference to the infamies perpetrated by Germany in the course of the war was greeted with particular applause, for the sinking of the Lusitania was felt to be perhaps the most wanton and inexcusable of all.

Although he made no direct reference to the United States, the Chancellor gave an American flavor to his speech by reference to Dr. Dernburg's explanations to the American people and by the following parallel:

"In this war it is the nation that endureth to the end that will win. How long will the war last? That is a question asked of me repeatedly. That question was put to Abraham Lincoln in another war, full of triumph, full of vicissitudes, full of moments of depression. 'When will this war end?' said some one to him, and his answer was, 'We accepted this war for an object, a worthy object, and the war will end when it is attained.'

"That must be the sentiment of every true-hearted Britisher today. Under God, I hope it will never end until that time comes."

He said the freedom of Europe from the Prussian mania to dominate the world was the Allies' supreme object.

GROUP OF SUBMARINES OUT?

British Naval Writer Thinks One Could Not Have Caught Lusitania.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 8.—Archibald Hurd, the naval expert of The Daily Telegraph, says:

"The assumption that a dead set was made on the Lusitania and that all the submarines of the latest type which were available were assembled for the purpose of attacking her is the only feasible explanation of the enemy's success. The liner, which had snatched the blue ribbon of the Atlantic from the Germans, must presumably have been steaming at least twenty-five knots when struck. Experience of the war had suggested that any vessel traveling at fifteen knots or more was immune from successful attack. The underwater speed of the swiftest German underwater craft is less than fifteen knots, and, therefore, there could be no hope in any circumstances of overtaking such an ocean greyhound, nor, except by luck, could a single submarine be in such a position as to enable her to close on her.

"It would, on the other hand, be useless to approach her quarry on the surface, as the moment the conning tower of the submarine was noticed the Captain of a vessel of such great speed as the Lusitania would change his course. Therefore, the assumption stands that there was a group of submarines distributed over a wide area through which it was thought the liner would pass. They were evidently waiting at rest until the moment came for one of them to launch her torpedo or torpedoes—for more than one of these were discharged—simultaneously.

"The submarine which happened to be on the course taken by the liner would see so great and towering a vessel as the Lusitania at a distance of fifteen miles or more on a brilliant afternoon such as yesterday. She may have had a ship flying a neutral flag acting as a lookout. Her Captain would merely have to choose his position and wait with the periscope alone above the surface, and then, when the Lusitania came on, launch his weapon or weapons."

PHILADELPHIA SAILS WITH CABINS FULL

Nine Tickets Bought on Pier and Only Six Early Reservations Canceled.

ADA REHAN GIVES UP TRIP

Superstitious About May—Capt. Mills Sure Germans Won't Attack American Liner.

The sinking of the Lusitania made little difference to the number of passengers sailing at noon yesterday on the American liner Philadelphia for Liverpool. Of the original 407 booked for the cabin on Friday night, six canceled their passages through nervousness, but nine others bought tickets at the pier yesterday, bringing the total up to 410 in the cabin and 500 third class.

Miss Ada Rehan, the actress, who has made twenty round trips with Captain Arthur R. Mills on the Philadelphia, had reservations for herself and two maids, but canceled them because of her superstition regarding the month of May. It was on the same liner, when it was called the Paris, that Miss Rehan sailed years ago with Augustin Daly, who caught the cold on that voyage that caused his death.

Seventy-five American citizens sailed in the cabin of the Philadelphia and 100 in the third-class, the remainder being English, Irish, Scandinavians and Greeks. The rush for the third class accomodation had been so great Friday and yesterday that 150 were shut out on the pier, as the ship could carry only 550.

Among well known persons in the cabin were: Mrs. W. Waddington, widow of the late French Ambassador at Washington; Colonel E. E. Dravo, U. S. A., and Mr. and Mrs. N. A. Pirrie, relatives of Lord Pirrie, one of the Directors and head of the Harland & Wolf shipyard at Belfast. Mrs. R. Bate and Miss Eleanor Bate, who canceled their sailing on Friday on the Cunarder Transylvania, sailed on the Philadelphia.

Captain Arthur R. Mills, one of the best known American captains of this port, who has cammanded the Philadelphia for twelve years, in an interview with a TIMES reporter said he did not believe the German submarines would attack an American passenger vessel and sink her without warning.

"I realize," he said, "that under the international laws concerning naval warfare the Germans have a right to take off any passengers belonging to the Allies who may be on board, and any cargo consigned to a British port, but they have no right to injure the ship or drown the passengers or crew. I shall take every precaution on nearing the Irish coast. On American Line vessels it is the rule now for all boats to be swung out ready for lowering on sighting the Fastnet, off Cape Clear, and leaving Liverpool the same precaution is taken until the ships are clear of the Fastnet."

There was a large crowd on the pier, mostly relatives and friends of passengers, and many of the women were in tears.

On the pier was Dr. Sherman Dunn, dressed in the khaki uniform of an American Red Cross surgeon, who said he had been booked to sail on the Philadelphia with the twelve nurses of a field ambulance unit, but a cablegram was received on Friday ordering them to sail on the French liner Espagne to Bordeaux, sailing yesterday at 3 P. M. Dr. Dunn said the unit was ordered to Amiens, and later would go to the base near Ypres.

WILL SHUN STEAMER LANES.

French Liner's Captain to Decide on Course When He Gets to Sea.

The French liner Espagne sailed at 3:25 P. M. for Bordeaux with eighty first, sixty second, and 110 third-class passengers and mails. During the forenoon ten first cabin passengers cancelled their tickets on account of the sinking of the Lusitania. Among them was F. Aldis of Chicago, who was accompanied by his wife and chauffeur. He was taking over his automobile to make a tour through the Chateaux district in France and into Switzerland, but decided at the last moment to go later when there are fewer dangers in Europe and on the way. Louis Naghle of Montreal was another passenger who took his baggage off the ship.

Captain M. Laument, master of the Espagne, said that he would not decide upon his course to Bordeaux until after he got over towards the French coast. "I should not be at all surprised," he added, "if the German submarines attempted an attack on one of the French liners after blowing up the Lusitania. I have no intention of taking the beaten track as it is just possible that the Germans have a base off Cape Finisteree. It is no use trying to steam away if the Lusitania was not fast enough to elude them off the Irish coast. The Germans have not gained anything by their act which will only bring trouble on them. They have destroyed a fine ship worth $7,000,000 which has never been used by the British government as a warship or for the transportation of troops. She was a peaceful merchant vessel carrying neutral passengers going to Europe on business."

Bouck White, of the Church of the Social Revolution, who recently served six months in jail, sailed on the Espagne on his way to France, Germany and England to study social conditions, including the future of the war babies. Twenty women members of his congregation went to the pier with presents of fruit and flowers and begged him not to sail.

NERVE FAILS AT GANGPLANK.

The Fabre liner Patria sailed at 3:30 P. M. for Marseilles with forty-five first, forty second, and 400 third class passengers, after ten passengers had canceled their bookings.

One of these to back out was a valet, David Shandler, who was to have sailed with B. F. Berry of Washington for Naples. The party included Robert Martin and his sister-in-law, Mrs. Regona Paxton, all from Washington, going abroad for th eSummer to the Italian lakes and Switzerland. After reading the reports of the sinking of the Cunarded the valet became so nervous that when the time came for him to board the Patria he could not walk up the gangway, and his employer sailed without him.

Two others were Mr. and Mrs. Jesse H. Stanton of Auburn, N. Y., who stayed in the city because Mrs. Stanton was so ill over the Lusitania disaster that she was unable to leave her bed to go to the steamer. Mr. Stanton went to the Fabre Line pier, South Brooklyn, to order the baggage to be sent back to his hotel.

David Jayne Hill, former Ambassador to Berlin, had booked a passage to Marseilles with his wife and maid, and went early to the Patria to look after an ambulance for which Mrs. Hill has contributed, which was to go on the ship to France. After remaining on board two hours Mr. Hill decided to cancel his passage and returned to New York.

F. H. Southwick, a New York broker, who sailed with his wife and chauffeur, said they were going to Switzerland to bring back an automobile that was commandeered last August. Ricardo Martin, the Metropolitan Opera House tenor, sailed on the Patria with fifteen trunks for his annual trip to Europe.

TROOPS NOW A LESSER NEED.

Admiralty Orders Cymric Here for Ammunition, Food, and oMtors.

The 388 passengers who arrived late yesterday on the White Star liner Symric from Liverpool, did not hear of the loss of life on the Lusitania until the ship arrived at Quarantine, at 2 P. M. A wireless message was received by the Cymric on Friday evening, and was posted on the bulletin board yesterday morning, which said the Cunarder had been torpedoed, but that all the passengers and crew had been saved.

Miss C. A. W. Kindt, one of the cabin passengers, was requested to leave the country by the British Government, when it was found that she was born in Germany, and had not registered as an alien enemy. It was said that Miss Kindt attracted the attention of the authorities by her pro-German attitude.

Captain F. E. Beadnell, master of the Cymric, said that it was a great shock when he heard fro mthe pilot at noon that the Lusitania had been torpedoed with such a frightful loss of life because he believed that her speed would make her safe. He said the Cymric had not passed any war vessels after leaving Liverpool and did not meet any when she was eastbound last voyage. He took every precaution to have a double lookout and his boats swung out after the ship left the Mersey.

"West bound I gave the Irish coast a wide berth," the Captain added, "but east bound I have to make Kinsale or the Tuskar to get my bearings for crossing the St. George's Channel."

The Cymric was chartered by the Government to take troops from Montreal to England while she was on her way to New York, but the order was cancelled the same day by the Admiralty. It was decided that ammunition, motor trucks, and provisions were needed worse than the troops, and the liner will leave on Wednesday for Liverpool with 18,000 tons of cargo in her hold in addition to 150 armored motor trucks, valued at $4,000 each, on her decks. She is the largest cruiser among the International Mercantile Marine ships sailing between New York and Liverpool. In order to make room for this immense cargo her steerage passenger accommodations will be dismantled today.

CANADIANS REPORTED SAFE.

Lady Allan, Though Injured, and Daughters Were Rescued.

Special to The New York Times.

TORONTO, Ont., May 8.—Many messages have been received today announcing the safety of Canadians. A. McKim, Limited, this morning got a cablegram from W. R. Keeble, saying that he and his wife are safe. He is London representative of McKim's. Another message said that Lady Allen and her daughters, Misses Gwen and Anna Allan had been saved. Lady Allan's back was injured.

Thomas Howe sent a message reading: "Safe at Queenstown." J. C. Eaton received a cable saying his sister, Mrs. J. S. E. Burnside, had been saved. There is no word yet, however, of Miss Burnside.

L. L. McMurray wired as follows: "Safe, well; will cable particulars tomorrow." He was a passenger some years ago on the ill-fated Republic. Percy Rogers cables: "Safe at Queenstown." Miss Kay sent the single word, "Saved." James Bohan's message was: "Safe and sound."

Mrs. R. R. Lockhardt received her husband's cable that he was safe at Queenstown. "We are safe," cabled Mrs. Lohden and children to her husband. J. H. Charles and daughter cabled, "Safely landed Queenstown."

A. J. Mitchell's message was, "Safe." He had been in shipwrecks twice before. A. R. Clark cabled, "Saved. Love to all."

The Red Cross Society received a cable saying, "Am safe." It is believed to be from Miss Laura Ryerson. There is uneasiness about Mrs. Ryerson. "Safe and well," said L. A. Hines and wife.

R. Rogers, editor of Jack Canuck, seems to have feared disaster, as shortly after he left New York he sent a wireless message to his barristers here saying, "Good-by. Look after my family if necessary." He has not been heard from.

Andrew Page of Medicine Hat, a third-class passenger, is safe. His brotsher received a cable from him this afternoon that he had arrived at Queenstown. Private advices announce the safety of Miss Violet James, a trained nurse of Edmonton. Others from Edmonton saved are Miss James, Miss Dorothy Dodd, also a trained nurse, and John Ellis, a carpenter.

In addition to Mrs. H. Cox and infant of Winnipeg, messages received tell of the safety of five other Winnipeg passengers, Mr. and Mrs. Ernest Thomas, Mrs. H. H. Burdon and her son, T. Sandells, and A. H. Adams. There were about twenty-five persons from Winnipeg on board.

TREASURE ON SUNKEN LINER.

Cash and Paper of Chicago People Alone Represents $5,000,000.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Ill., May 8.—In the strong box of the Lusitania at the bottom of the sea off the Irish coast is approximately $5,000,000 of money, foreign exchange, and other valuables belonging to Chicago people.

Of this treasure $3,000,000 consists of foreign exchange belonging to the First National Bank. This paper was largely duplicated before it left the local bank, and it is not expected that the actual loss will be great.

Had the Post Office Department not prescribed shortly before the Lusitania's departure that mails intended for her be specifically directed to the ship, the amount of Chicago treasure aboard her would have been much greater. The Illinois Trust and Savings Bank and the Continental and Commercial National Bank are congratulating themselves that the bulk of their mails missed the liner.

RELIEF FUNDS OPENED.

Lord Mayors of London and Liverpool Move to Help Survivors.

LONDON, May 8.—The Lord Mayors of London and Liverpool have started relief funds for the Lusitania sufferers.

Members of Lloyd's said today they did not believe the sinking of the Lusitania would affect shipping, and declared that sailings would continue as usual.

This afternoon there are crowds before the windows of the Cunard offices reading the lists of survivors.

LIVERPOOL, May 8.—A Lusitania Relief Fund has been opened here. Lord Derby subscribed £250, ($1,250.)

DENIES SUBMARINE'S LOSS.

Craft Defeated German Airship, Great Britain Asserts.

LONDON, May 8.—The British Admiralty this evening issued the following official statement:

"The statement published recently by the German authorities that a British submarine had been sunk in an encounter with a German airship is false. On the contrary, the submarine has now returned uninjured and reports that she damaged the airship by gunfire and drove her off."

Gimbels to Aid Survivors.

An offer of assistance to American survivors of the Lusitania was sent yesterday by Gimbel Brothers, the merchants. Louis E. Weber, London representative of the firm, was notified to aid wherever possible. Inquiries for Americans directed to the London bureau of Gimbel Brothers, Oxford Circus, London, it was said, would be received.

TELL OF THEIR OWN SAFETY.

Survivors Send Messages to Anxious Friends and Relatives.

In addition to the lists of survivors published through the American Consul at Queenstown and other agencies, several who escaped drowning when the Lusitania sank sent private cable messages to friends and relatives in this country.

The safety of Lady Mackworth and of her father, D. A. Thomas, the Welsh coal king, was announced in a cablegram from Cardiff, Wales, where Mr. Thomas and his daughter live, to R. M. Bryan of 29 Broadway. Rhys Evans, Mr. Thomas's secretary, was also saved.

G. B. Bartlett of London, notified Mrs. H. N. Rothschild of this city, by cable, that he and his wife had reached Liverpool safely. Mrs. Bartlett is the daughter of Mrs. Rothschild and was formerly Miss Irma Rothschild of Chicago.

George T. Turton, the Australian General Manager of the Royal Insurance Company of Liverpool, is safe in Queenstown, according to a cable received from him by Charles H. Holland, general manager of the Royal Indemnity Company of 84 William Street.

Frank Partridge, art dealer and interior decorator, of 741 Fifth Avenue, is safe. He was traveling with Edgar Gorer, who is among the missing. Alexander F. Otto, Mr. Partridge's New York manager, said yesterday that he had received a cablegram from Mr. Partridge containing the one word, "Saved." The message was dated from Queenstown, so it is supposed that Mr. Partridge is in that place. His wife and children are waiting for him in London.

George G. Mosely of the George C. Cholwell Company, tea brokers, of 126 Front Street, announced his safety yesterday in a cablegram to his firm.

George A. Kessler, the wine importer, made known his safety to his brother-in-law, Samuel Roberts, by this cable from Cork, Ireland: "Saved. Unharmed. In water three hours."

Michael G. Byrne of 444 West Fiftieth Street was known to be well in Queenstown last night when his family received a cable message from him reading: "Safe here."

Wallace B. Phillips of 29 Lefferts Place, Brokolyn, announced his safety last night in a cable to his father, Henry W. Phillips, who lives at his son's home. The message read: "Safe. Uninjured." Mr. Phillips is associated with the Pyrene Manufacturing Company and left on the Lusitania to conduct business for that concern in England. He returned from London on the Lusitania on her last west-bound trip and sailed again despite the warning of the German Embassy, which he read with more amusement than apprehension.

Robert Ewart of 1,251 Broadway, Brooklyn, is safe in Queenstown, according to a message received from him by Frederick Smith, with whom he lives. "Am saved," the cable read. Mr. Ewart, who is the manager of a tea and grocery house in Brooklyn, was going abroad on his vacation.

N. N. Alles, reported saved, is auditor of the Hatel St. Regis Company. He is an Englishman, and was on his way to see his mother, who was reported to be dying. He has an estate in England. R. M. Haahn, manager of the St. Regis, received early yesterday morning a cable from Mr. Alles, dated Queenstown, which reported that he was safe and well.

Mrs. John B. Duncan, who lives at the Plaza, had received no word late last night as to whether two of her grandchildren, the children of Dr. and Mrs. F. Warren Pearl, had been saved. Reports in the newspapers indicated that Dr. and Mrs. Pearl had been saved, and one list of survivors had the names of the two children and also mentioned "children" after Mrs. Pearl's name. However, a cable received late in the afternoon from Dr. Pearl told that, while Mrs. Pearl, two children, and the nurse had been saved, the other two children were still missing. They were, respectively, 14 months and 2½ years old. The two saved are 3 months and 5 years old.

GOVERNMENT HEAVIEST LOSER

Liable for 80 Per Cent of $7,500,000 Insurance on Liner.

LONDON, May 8.—The Lusitania was insured for about £1,500,000 ($7,500,000.) Of this amount the British Government, under the war risk plan, will have to pay about 80 per cent. The cargo is said to have been insured almost entirely in American insurance offices.

OPERA HOUSE BARS GERMAN WAR SONG

"Deutschland Ueber Alles" Cut Out of Rally Program After Lusitania Deaths.

SUTRO SPEECH ALSO BANNED

Promoters Refused to Delay Benefit Out of Respect to American Grief Over the Irish Sea Tragedy.

Against the urging of the Metropolitan Opera House Directors, who nevertheless were bound by a contract made before the Lusitania was torpedoed, Germans, German-Americans, and sympathizers with the German cause met at the Opera House last night in numbers enough to fill every available seat and to occupy all of the standing room the police would permit to be filled.

The meeting was for the purpose of raising funds for the German Red Cross, and the entertainment provided consisted of a rendition of the opera "Die Fledermaus," with liberal interpolations in the second act.

In accordance with a protest from the Metropolitan Opera House management the interpolated numbers were radically altered at the last moment. A large amount of German bunting, with which the Opera House was to have been decorated, was left in the Opera House cellar. The song "Deutschland Ueber Alles" was stricken from the program, and Theodor Sutro, chairman and treasurer of the committee in charge, was forbidden to make a speech expressing sympathy with the relatives of victims of the Lusitania, in which, using Lincoln's words, "for charity to all and malice towards none," he sought to mould American judgment of the Lusitania's fate.

Because he was not permitted to make his speech from the opera house stage, Chairman Sutro gave out copies of it to reporters, with an explanatory note that he had been forbidden to deliver it by "the rules laid down by the Metropolitan Opera House Company."

Opera Management Grieved.

It was stated that the strong opposition of the Metropolitan Opera House management to giving the benefit performance last night was due, in part, to the fact that members of the Vanderbilt family, including Alfred Gwyan Vanderbilt, who perished on the torpedoed Lusitania, were among the heaviest c contributors to the Metropolitan Opera House when it was in financial distress, while William K. Vanderbilt was a member of the Board of Directors.

To forestall possible trouble Detective Captain Gildea had fifty detectives mingling in the crowd in front of the opera house before the performance commenced. He distributed his men in the audience after the performance commenced and kept them on watch while the distinguished German citizens, who were present, entered their automobile at the benefit's conclusion.

The program stated that the benefit was "under the protectorate of his Excellency, the German Tmbassador." A portrait of Kaiser Wilhelm II., in a field gray uniform, formed the frontispiece of the program, and it was announced that the German Government was officially represeted at the function by Captain von Papen. Ambassador von Bernstorff, it was explained, was absent because he had been suddenly called to Washington. William Bayard Hale, biographer of President Wilson, and the President's special envey for a time in Mexico, occupied a seat in the grand tier box with Captain von Papen.

Mr. Sutro Explains.

Beatween the acts of the opera most of the distinguished men present gathered in the foyer bemind the grand tier boxes and discussed the situation in tense but constrained tones. They considered the advisability of making a statement for the press, but Chairman Sutro finally approached reporters with a suggestion "that it was out of place to make any statements in the present state of public opinion."

"We did discuss with the Metropolitan Opera House management this afternoon the advisability of postponing the benefit performance," said Mr. Sutro, "but the committee decided that we could not do this at the eleventh hour. By way of explanation, I will say that as an American citizen and a resident here since my fifth year, I express the sentiments of all present when I saq we deeply sympathize with those who were unfortunately, as a consequence of this relentless war, lost on the Lusitania.

"If this performance could have been postponed at the eleventh hour I am sure it would have been, in accordance with our sentiments to do so. We seriously considered that step, but found it absolutely impossible. It is not from a feeling of levity or indifference in the face of this terrible bereavement that this performance must go on. I myself have personal friends among those lost, and I am therefore filled with deep sorrow. We are all deeply imbued with the spirit expressed in the words of Abraham Lincoln as the best guide of conduct for all American citizens in these troublesome times: 'With malice toward nene and charity for all.'"

Gadski Changes Her Song.

The feeling of those present, while ran high throughout the evening reached a moment of dramatic tenseness when Mme. Johanna Gadski came forward in the midst of a chorus number of "Die Fledermaus." Mme. Gadski was substituting for "Deutschland Ueber Alles."

Her voice rang out with the words "Wie nachte mir der Schlummer," but there was an ovation at the moment the orchestra picked up the lyric strains of Weber's light-hearted song. Many men in the grand tier boxes stood while it was sung, as if it had been the piece for which it was substituted. Mme. Gadski was recalled time and again, but she heeded the injunction of the management and rendered for each encore some lilting lyric of love or adventure having nothing to do with war.

The principal members of the cast were Metropolitan pera House singers, but the chorus was composed of members of the German Liederkranz. Among the opera stars who appeared were Miss Frieda Hempel, Mme. Margarete Ober, Mme. Elisabeth Schumann, Albert Reiss, Max Bloch, Johannes Sembach, and Carl Braun. A quartet number, "Am Woerther See," by Mmes. Melanie Kurt and Marie Mattfeld and Messrs. Sembach and Braun, filled in as a substitute for German patriotic songs, which were to have followed the "Deutschland" number.

Among thoe holding Grand Tier and Parterre boxes were Mrs. Jacob Ruppert, Mrs. Isaac Guggenheim, Mrs. Randolph Guggenheimer, Paul Warburg, Mrs. Samuel Untermyer, Mrs. William R. Shepherd, James Speyer, Felix Warburg, George Ehret, Jr., Signer Gatti-Casazza and Adolph Lewisohn.

U. S. VICE CONSUL MISSING.

LONDON, May 8.—E. Kilbourne Foote, American Vice Consul at Chemnitz, is missing, according to an announcement made here today by the Central News.

This organization says Mr. Foote left his post a month ago for America. Nothing has been heard from him since, and it is thought that he has been stopped by the German authorities. Mr. Foote is a native of Ohio.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—The State Department has no record of a leave of absence having been granted to Vice Consul Foote, without which officials say it would be most unusual for him to leave Germany. The department has had no word of Foote for some time, but was much interested in the report of his disappearance.

LUSITANIA'S FATE FORETOLD IN DECREE

Wording of War-Zone Order the Beginning of Our Correspondence with Germany.

BROUGHT SHARP WARNING

Nationality of the Ship May Prove a Vital Point in Diplomatic Action Likely to Follow.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—The controversy between the United States and Germany over Germany's disregard of American lives and ships on the high seas, which reached what might be called a climax with the sinking of the Lusitania and the killing of more than 100 citizens, began as far back as February, and an incident of it was the use at that time of the American flag oddly enough, by the Lusitania herself. Before that occurred, however, a serious cause for the subsequent controversy had been given by Germay, in her declaration of Feb. 4 of a war zone around the British Iles, to be effective on Feb. 18.

Formal expressions by the American Government regarding Germany's war zone proclamation indicate that the events of yesterday will be regarded in the gravest light here. Interest here now centres in the question whether the President's peaceable inclinations will permit him to express in regard to a particular accomplished fact the same stern disapproval he has already indicated to Germany such acts would call forth, if committed against citizens of the United States. One incident analogous to the sinking of the Lusitania was the destruction of the British ship Falaba, which resulted in the death of one American, Leon C. Thresher. But so far as the United States appears to have made no representations to Germany further than the general warning some months before the Falaba was torpedoed.

Every phase of yesterday's tragedy seems to have been deliberately contemplated by the German Govrnment at the time the war zon was proclaimd, and the death of neutrals, even the sinking of neutral ships, was admittedly within the realm of probable results of the German policy then instituted. It was to this phase of the German proclamation that the United States replied in a note extraordinarily firm in tone, and it is this phase of the German proclamation that the killing of more than 100 American passengers on the Lusitania now seems to illustrate.

Sinister Terms of Decree.

> The waters around Great Britain, including the whole of the English Channel, are hereby declared to be includtd within the zone of war, and after the 18th inst. all enemy merchant vessels encountered in these waters will be destroyed, even if it may not be possible always to save their crews and passengers.
> Within this war zone neutrals vessels are exposed to danger, since, in view of the misuse of neutral flags ordered by the Government of Great Britain on the 31st ult., and of the hazards of naval warfare, neutral vessels cannot always be prevented from suffering from the attacks intened for enemy ships.

This announcement was made on Feb. 4. Two days afterward and before the American response was sent to Berlin, the Lusitania on her way from New York, steamed up the Irish Sea to Liverpool on about the same course she was following yesterday, flying the American instead of the British flag. On Feb. 10 Mr. Bryan made public notes to Great Brittain, deprecating such use of the American flag, and to Germany sharply protesting against the threat to American navigation apparent in the German proclamation.

The American note to Germany regarding the war zone is the sharpest American expression on international affairs since President Wilsonaddressed Congress for the overthrow of Huerta in Mexico. The only other approach to its harshness of language is an indirect reference to German procedure found in a note from Mr. Bryan to Sir Edward Grey on March 30. Both references are pertinent to the present crisis.

The German Government, in its note to Germany, said it felt it a duty to request the Imperial German Government to consider before action the critical situation in respect to the relation between this country and Germany which might arise were the German naval forces, in carrying out the policy foreshadowed in the Admiralty's proclamation, to destroy any merchant vessel of the United States or cause the death of American citizens. Further on the note says: "If the commanders of German vessels of war should act upon the presumption that the flag of the United States was not being used in good faith, and should destroy on the high seas an American vessel, or the lives of American citizens, it would be difficult for the Government of the United States to view the act in any other light than as an indefensible violation of neutral rights, which it would be very hard indeed to reconcile with the friendly relations now so happily subsisting between the two Governments."

An Uncertain Point.

These passages, and indeed, the entire note, leave uncertain whether the American Government regards the killing of American citizens under the terms of the German proclamation, regardless of the nationality of the ship on which they happen to be, identical with the sinking of an American ship with the incidental killing of her passengers or crew. In both places both offenses are mentioned as of equal gravity, but it must be noted that both are mentioned in close textual references to German neglect or ignorance of an American ship's nationality. If the Government does not now take vigorous steps regarding the American deaths on the Lusitania, it is expected that this failure to push the matter will be explained on the ground that the Americans were on a British ship.

In this connection, however, analogy is pointed out between the incidental killing of Americans on a foreign ship sunk in violation of the general principles of international usage, and the accidental killing of a man while the slayer is engaged in some other felony. At common law such an accidental killing would be murder of the first degree. And it is sugested that the killing of Americans incident to the improper sinking of a British ship without warning and without effort at rescuing the passengers and crew, would merit an equally harsh judgment under the rulings of international law.

The American Government, in its acts before the present crisis, has not seemed to admit the distinction Germans now make as to the nationality of the ship on which the killing occurs. In publishing its plocamation regarding the war zone, the German Government expressed the hope that "the neutral powers will show no less consideration for the vital interests of Germany than for those of England, and will aid in keeping their citizens and the property of the latter from this area. This is more to be expected as it must be to the interests of the neutral powers to see this destructive war end as soon as possible."

Who Was to Be "Aided"?

Who was to be "aided" by the neutrals was not made clair, but presumably the agencies responsible for the proclamation. At any rate the United States has felt called upon to take no steps to discourage its citizens from embarking on British ships or sending their merchandise by them, and presumably felt that this was a safe means on transportation under the rules of civilized warfare.

As to the use of the American flag by British merchantmen, the United States pointed out to Great Britain the serious danger such a course would involve for neutral shipping. And while it did not expressly deny the propriety of such use of flage to escape capture, it requested that the British Government use its influence to discourage such a practice. The British Government defended its use of neutral flags, but denied any order for a general practice. Since then no more such instances have been reported, and the Lusitania at the time of her sinking was flying her proper pennants.

The next incident between the United States and Germany came from the sinking of the American ship William P. Frye on Jan. 28 by the Prinz Eitel Friedrich. This occurrence really antedated the whole controversy regarding the war zone, but nothing was known of it before the German ship entered Hampton Roads bringing the Frye's crew as prisoners.

Eleven days after the sinking of the Frye and twelve days before the war zone proclamation was to become effective—on Feb. 6—Count von Bernstorff, the German Ambassador, declared in a prepared statement that Germany did not "intend to molest or seize American vessels laden with foodstuffs for the civilian populations of enemy countries.

As the Frye was loaded with corn consigned to order this statement would seem to make the sinking of the Frye an act of unauthorized personal piracy on the part of the Prinz Eitel's commander, Captain Thierichens.

But when the United States protested under the rules of international law, the German Foreign Office sustained the Prinz Eitel, admitting the American claim for damages, however, under an old treaty with Prussia, which American officials appear to have forgotten. Since then Germany has suggested that the question of damages be settled in a German prize court, and the last communication on the subject is the American objection to this procedure, favoring instead a settlement through ordinary diplomatic channels.

First American Victim.

The first instance of the killing of an American at sea by German naval forces occurred when the British passenger steamer, Falaba, was torpedoed and Leon C. Thresher, an American, was killed. The German Ambassador on April 6 gave out a statement on the subject, saying that the submarine requested the Falaba's officers "to put passengers and crew into lifeboats." The contention has since been made that the loss of life was due to delay on the part of the ship's crew, and emphasis has been laid, as it was by the German Ambassador, on the fact that some time for disembarking was allowed. As no warning was given the Lusitania, the Ambassador's defense of the killing of Mr. Thresher would seem to amount to a plea of guilty as to the Americans killed yesterday.

The next marine incident of this sort, and the last before the sinking of the Lusitania, was the explosion encountered by the American ship Gulflight off the Scilly Islands. A submarine was sighted about half an hour before the explosion, but her nationality was not ascertained, and there is nothing in the information so far published to establish whether the explosion was caused by a mine dragged from its moorings or by a torpedo fired from the supposedly German submarine. Investigations are still under way.

Shipments of Arms.

Coincident with these various incidents, each of which has occasioned a new phase of the controversy between the United States and Germany, ran an undercurrent of misunderstanding regarding the exportation of ammunitions from America for use by the armies of the Allies. This subject gained wide publicity last Winter when bills were introduced in Congress to prohibit such exports and large German-American delegations appeared before Congressional committees and argued for their enactment.

These bills had little support in Congress, and President Wilson flatly opposed them on the ground that the exclusive exportation of munitions to the allied armies was merely an accident resulting from the allied powers' control of the sea, while an embargo on such shipments would be deliberate violation of American neutrality in favor of the Teutonic empires.

The German Foreign Office, in most of its communications regarding the British blockade of German foodstuffs, has referred rather pointedly to the benefit accruing to the Allies from their easy access ot American arms factories. But these communications expressly admitted the propriety of such shipments and of the American course regarding them.

These admissions apparently would have put the whole question at rest, but early this month Count von Bernstorff published a memorandum on the subject, in which he seemed to appeal from the American Government to the American voters by saying that the "American people" could find a way to end the exportation of arms. This revived the whole discussion, and from many quarters were furious demands for the Ambassador's recall. Count von Bernstorff insisted, however, that he had merely acted on orders from his Government, and Mr. Bryan, instead of giving him his passports, replied in a gently worded note, personally written by President Wilson, explaining the American position.

COMMENTS OF THE PRESS.

Editorial Views Expressed by Papers Outside of New York.

Editorial comment on the sinking of the Lusitania, expressed by newspapers in other cities of the United States, follows:

Time to Keep Cool.

Special to The New York Times.

MILWAUKEE, Wis., May 8.—The Sentinel tomorrow will say:

> For the American public and the American press that takes its tone neither from Downing Street nor Potsdam the obviously right word now is to leave to our own Government the internal aspect of this affair in so far as it is brought home to us nationally by the deplorable fact that a number of Americans, throwing to the winds prudence for themselves and for their country, and in spite of warnings from German sources and discouragements from their own State Department, took passage through the "war zone" on a British ship on whose customs manifest it was of record that she carried "5,470 cases of ammunition, valued at $300,000." * * *
>
> It is emphatically a time for our people to keep their heads, to refrain from snap judgments and wild talk, and to remember that the Lusitania affair, in so far as it concerns us nationally, is distinctly one for the handling and determination of their own Government, which knows all the facts in all their bearings and may be trusted to act with sobriety, patriotism, mature judgment, and for the best interests of the country and mankind.

Three Courses for U. S.

Special to The New York Times.

DALLAS, Texas, May 8.—The Dallas Morning News tomorrow will say editorially:

> Three possible courses of action suggest themselves. One would be to abandon the policy of neutrality for one of belligerence. Another would be to suspend diplomatic relations with Germany, and still another would be to league all self-respecting neutral nations in an attitude of protest against the barbarity of Germany. Either of the courses last named would probably be found preferable to that first named. To make war on Germany would be difficult, hedged in as it is already with enemies; and it would likewise be largely futile. To suspend diplomatic relations with Germany would signify that Germany had made itself an Ishmaelite among nations. To league the neutral powers in protest would have a like signification.
>
> Nor would the consequences of either course be trivial. To feel the condemnation it has incurred would intensify the humiliation and sting of defeat, and with that incitement lodged against it, even victory, if indeed the chance of victory has not been forfeited, could not erase the brand which would thus be put upon this, the author of this crime against civilization.

National Honor First.

DENVER, Col., May 8.—The Post says editorially:

> It is infinitely better for a nation to perish from the face of the earth than to lose its honor, its manhood, or its self-respect.
>
> Peace at any price or craven cowardice is an unfailing sign of national or indivirual decadence. No nation that either refuses to protect its citizens or its honor can long endure or can ever become an important factor in the advancement of mankind.
>
> Let us hope that the great United States, richest and most powerful nation on earth, will not hesitate to demand an immediate and proper reparation for the barbarous and inconcelvable destruction of innocent American men, women, and children.
>
> There are worse things than wars; there are worse things than death.

VIEWS OF CONGRESS ON NATION'S DUTY

Senators and Representatives in General Advise Calm Waiting for Facts.

WILLIAMS IS ENRAGED

In response to a telegraphic request from THE NEW Y RK TIMES for an expression of their opinion as to what America's attitude should be on the sinking of the Lusitania, the following replies have been received from members of the last or the present Congress:

"Vandalism," Says Senator Williams.

YAZOO CITY, Miss., May 8.—It is an act of vandalism and a flagrant violation of the spirit and letter of the law of nations uselessly to sink a merchant ship filled with non-combatants, and especially when many of these must have been and were known beforehand to be citizens of a neutral country. Unless proper measures are taken by the destroying belligerent to save the lives of passengers, we ought to protest most firmly and obtain guarantees that like acts will not be repeated, as well as insist upon indemnity.

If the principle of indemnity be not conceded and satisfactory promises for the future given, we should mobilize our fleet. Neutrals have some rights, among them right of life, even under circumstances such as these. No military purpose can be served by blowing up a merchant ship, even when it is the property of subjects of a belligerent nation, without complying with the time-honored rule of all civilized nations requiring proper precautions to save the lives of non-combatant passengers, especially neutrals. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS.

Hoke Smith Cites Warning.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—I do not regard the sinking of the Lusitania as likely to produce serious international complications between Germany and the United States. It was an English vessel carrying munitions of war. Americans had been warned generally to keep off English vessels in the war zone where the Lusitania was destroyed. They had been warned too keep off this vessel on this trip.

Germany had put the world on notice of the purpose to torpedo all English vessels found in a specified war zone as a retaliation for the exclusion by Great Britain from Germany of foodstuffs and other non-contraband commodities necessary for the use of the men and women of Germany.

We all condemn the heathen destruction of lives on the Lusitania. We should not forget the effort of Great Britain to keep food out of Germany and the number of vessels carrying cargoes belonging to citizens of the United States now held in English ports and prize courts in utter disregard of the rights of citizens of the United States.

The destruction of the English vessel is not so likely to produce international complications for the United States as the case of the Gulflight.—HOKE SMITH.

Senator Thomas's View.

DENVER, Col., May 8.—The attitude of the Government upon the sinking of the Lusitania should, in my judgment, be in accord with its note to Germany. The Lusitania tragedy differs only in degree from that of the Falaba. Apart from their greater fatalities neither may develop a condition so acute as the destruction of the Gulflight.

CHARLES N. THOMAS.

Lippitt Awaits Details.

PAWTUCKET, R. I., May 8.—In reply to your telegram I think the destruction of the Lusitania too serious a matter to form an opinion until full details are known and have been thoroughly thought over. If actually due to a submarine after the warning prevalent at the time of sailing, and if more than a strange coincidence, I suggest that the importance of such attacks on the ultimate results of the war have been underestimated.

HENRY F. LIPPITT.

McCumber Counsels Calmness.

WAHPETON, N. D., May 8.—People should remain calm until all the facts can be ascertained and weighed and until the rights and duties of both belligerents and neutrals can be made to conform to the new conditions and necessities of warfare. Matters at present should be left in hands of President.

P. J. McCUMBER.

Sherman Maintains Silence.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 8.—I believe the public interest requires a member of the Senate to preserve silence at this time. LAWRENCE Y. SHERMAN.

Says Trust the President.

JACKSONVILLE, Fla., May 8.—I advise against hasty conclusions. Trust the President.

DUNCAN U. FLETCHER.

Need Not Embroil Us.

STROUDSBURG, Pa., May 8.—The loss of American lives on the Lusitania is a matter of grave concern to our people, but it does not, under the circumstances, call for immediate drastic action on the part of the United States. It certainly ought not to embroil us in this foreign war.

The Lusitania was flying the British flag, and carrying munitions of war for the support of a belligerent. Neutral passengers, who, in the face of warnings, undertook this perilous voyage, certainly assumed some risk themselves, for which the entire nation ought not to be asked to suffer. Of course, the destruction of a passenger boat is horrible. War is always horrible.

This method of fighting is not humane—it is hardly civilized, but there is no such thing as humanity in civilized warfare. Our people may have the greatest confdence that the President will deal with this admittedly serious situation with a wise forbearance which will make for peace, without sacrifice of any of our real rights.

A. MITCHELL PALMER.

Bristow Calls It "Piracy."

SALINA, Kan., May 8.—The sinking of the Lusitania I regard as a crime more infamous than piracy and should be so treated by the Governments of all civilized nations. JOSEPH L. BRISTOW.

Caleb Powers's Opinion.

BARBOURVILLE, Ky., May 8.—This country is not the insurer of either the lives or the safety of the citizens, especially aboard foreign vessels, who of their own volition subject themselves to the dangers and perils of the war zone, and, while this country does and should deeply deplore the sinking of the Lusitania, yet it should not be involved in war by reasons thereof.

CALEB POWERS.

Leaves It to the President.

SMITHFIELD, N. C., May 8.—I have a very profound conviction as to what the attitude of our Government should be concerning the sinking of the Lusitania, but prefer to leave the matter entirely in the hands of President Wilson without venturing my own opinion until all particulars are known.

EDWARD W. POU.

Senator Oliver Non-Committal.

PITTSBURGH, May 8.—I do not think it advisable to say anything at present.

GEORGE T. OLIVER.

Relies on President.

DUQUEEN, Ark., May 8.—The sinking of the Lusitania should be promptly investigated, but no hasty ill-advised action necessary. I have confidence in both the wisdom and ability of President Wilson to handle the situation.

OTIS WINGO.

Clark Reserves Judgment.

EVANSTON, Wis., May 8.—Have not sufficient information to warrant giving an opinion on the sinking of the Lusitania. C. D. CLARK.

Senator Hollis Silent.

CONCORD, N. H., May 8.—I do not care to express an opinion.

HENRY F. HOLLIS.

Advises Waiting for Facts.

POCATELLO, Idaho, May 8.—Relative to the sinking of the Lusitania, the attitude of the American people should be to reserve judgment until the facts are known and passed upon by the proper officials of our Government.

JAMES H. BRADY.

Trusts President Wilson.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 8.—I think America's attitude on the sinking of the Lusitania should be that of a great, strong, and thoughtful nation, too conscious of its strength to be moved to hasty or excited action. I have supreme confidence in the wisdom and patriotism of the President and his advisers, and in their ability to deal with the unfortunate situation in such way as to conserve both the honor and the peace of the United States.

JAMES M. GRAHAM.

Would Demand Reparation.

HAMILTON, Mon., May 8.—Replying to your inquiry of this date I think reparation and prevention of repetition should be insisted upon. I am willing to leave the handling of the matter to the Executive Department as long as Congress is not in session. Should Congress convene would then decide what course in my opinion it ought to pursue.

H. L. MYERS.

TAFT TRUSTS WILSON.

A Situation for Great National Concern, Says Ex-President.

MILWAUKEE, May 8.—"The news of the sinking of the Lusitania as it comes this morning is most distressing," said former President Taft on his arrival from Madison today. "It presents a situation of the most difficult character, properly awakening great national concern.

"I do not wish to embarrass the President of the Administration by a discussion of the subject at this stage of the information, except to express confidence that the President will follow a wise and patriotic course."

BALDWIN URGES CAUTION.

Ex-Governor Thinks the President Needs No Advice.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 8.—Ex-Governor Simeon E. Baldwin, former Chief Justice of the Connecticut Supreme Court, an authority on international law, today made the following statement in relation to the sinking of the Lusitania:

"The Lusitania case presents in more imposing form the same question already raised by previous attacks on the vessels of a belligerent carrying Americans.

"Our Government announced some time since that it would be disposed to hold to a strict accountability a nation authorizing the sinking of an American ship, or one with American passengers sailing under the American flag, if that attack was made in what that nation had designated as a war zone, in which commerce with the belligerents were prohibited. The case now presented is an attack in such a zone of a foreign ship not sailing under American colors, though carrying some American passengers.

"A very great weight of responsibility has been thrown by this incident upon the President. He ought to be allowed to take the question up calmly and patiently, and I doubt if advice from the newspapers or any other private source is at present advisable. The State Department is well officered, and it may be presumed that whatever the President decides upon will be best course to pursue.

"It is important to remember that should this incident become the cause of difference between Germany and the United States there are other methods than war to which the United States could resort."

WOULD EXCUSE KAISER.

John Wanamaker Doesn't Believe He Ordered Sinking of Lusitania.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, May 8.—John Wanamaker said of the sinking of the Lusitania:

"It is partly my funeral, because three of my business family were on board the ship.

"I had the privilege of a quiet hour once with the German Emperor, and I do not believe that he is responsible for this catastrophe that involves the United States.

"Whoever are responsible for the conduct of the war must have lost their heads.

"Please spare me from talking further. The only one to speak now is the President of the United States. God help him."

GOV. DUNNE URGES CALMNESS.

SPRINGFIELD, Ill., May 8.—Governor Dunne today issued a formal signed statement urging calmness in the face of the sinking of the Lusitania.

"American citizens generally, and particularly those in public office outside of the office of the Secretary of State, should not in this grave crisis forestall or embarrass the President and the Department of State by giving utterance to their personal views in relation to this grave calamity," says the statement.

It closes with an expression of confidence in the Wilson Administration and faith that it will "avert the awful calamity of war with honor and credit to the American republic."

EDISON MOURNS FRIENDS.

Famous Inventor Too Shocked to Comment on Lusitania.

Special to The New York Times.

WEST ORANGE, N. J., May 8.—"I am too shocked by the news of the sinking of the Lusitania to comment on it now. I had friends aboard, and I mourn their loss." This is all Thomas A. Edison would say when asked to make a statement on the sinking of the big merchantman by German submarines.

When seen by a reporter the famous inventor was at his desk in his laboratory scanning the latest reports in a newspaper. He raised his hand to warn the would-be interviewer to ask no more questions.

DENMARK IS SHOCKED.

"Ugliest, Most Cruel Result" of War, Says Copenhagen Paper.

COPENHAGEN, May 8, (via London.)—Commenting on the torpedoing of the Lusitania the Ekstrabladet says:

"The catastrophe must fill the whole civilized world with horror. It is the ugliest, the most cruel result the war has yet reported."

SEES MORE DRASTIC SUBMARINE POLICY

PRESS RENEWS ATTACKS

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 8.—The British newspapers continue to express their great indignation at the attack on the Lusitania and to heap reproaches on the Germans for their submarine war.

Change in German Policy.

A noteworthy suggestion is made editorially, by The Manchester Guardian. It says:

"The submarine blockade began on Feb. 18 and there is no doubt the experience of the first two months was very disappointing to German hopes during that time, although the German submarines destroyed some ships belonging to the smaller European neutrals, they attacked no American vessel, an immunity for which sufficient reason may be found in the threat of the United States to hold Germany accountable for attacks on her flag and citizens.

"We imagine that the discrimination between Norwegian ships and those which were either American or like the British Atlantic liners carrying a large number of American citizens was deliberate and that by the middle of April the German naval authorities had come to the conclusion that their blockade would be wholly ineffectual unless they could instruct their commanders to do as they had originally intended to do, and would always have done but for the American threat, to torpedo and sink all British ships without distinction, whether they were or were not likely to be carrying American citizens and possibly American ships as well.

"Otherwise, how did the German Ambassador at Washington, who was admittedly acting on instructions from Berlin, come to insert in American newspapers an advertisement, dated April 22, in which he solmenly warned Americans not to enter the war zone, and told them they would do so at their own peril? In theory they had been entering it at their peril ever since Feb. 18, and it was therefore unnecessary for the German Government to issue a special warning unles it had decided on the drastic application of its submarine policy without regard to American interests, but was nevertheless anxious, if possible, to avoid an open quarrel.

"At all events almost simultaneously with the appearance of the advertisement came the sinking of the first American steamer, the Gulflight, with the loss of three lives, and now comes this attack on an Atlantic liner leading to the death of many American passengers. We should say it is the beginning of a campaign in which American citizens are to take their chance of drowning in order to give the submarine a better chance of injuring this country. It is the application to the United States of the same doctrine of military necessity which has led to the use of suffocating gases, and the poisoning of wells, and we shall be astonished if Germany, having made a beginning, does not now devote a great deal of attention to the Atlantic routes."

The Kaiser's Inferno.

The Star editorial article says:

"In Dantes Inferno there are nine circles; in the Kaisers there are many circles. The Belgian crime is the central circle. Round it as war went on red circle after red circle spread in awful waves of ferocity. The world knows them all by heart. The Lusitania crime is only a new circle. It is no redder than the others; it is merely wider. It embraces the great free republic of the United States, which has pledged itself to hold the Red Kaiser to strict accountability

"America is the best judge of her own honor. She has striven nobly to preserve her neutrality, and the Red Kaiser has rained blows upon its fragile fabric. Will it bear this blow of blows? We shall see. But we are sure that the Germans have misread American character as fatally as they have misread the British character.

"The gospel of frightfulness will not prevail against the English-speaking races. For us there is one thing to do, and one thing only. We are a race of men and we will arm ourselves as no race has ever armed itself against an enemy of mankind. We will hold him with a bulldog grip, and, in Abraham Lincolns words, 'choke and chew' till the sure and certain end."

Hall Caine's Opinion.

"When three years ago the Titanic was sunk by an iceberg and many hundreds of precious lives were lost a great cry from the heart of humanity went up to God, asking why the blind and merciless powers nature had been permitted to overwhelm his children.

"On Friday, with malice aforethought, deliberately, wantonly, the Lusitania was sunk by a submarine. Many hundreds of innocent lives again were lost and the crime that man committed against man was wilful murder.

"What Great Britain and her allies have to say of this murder is being said today by shot and shell. What has America to say of it—America as a nation. American widows and orphans are weeping. The world is waiting and listening."

Walter Phelps Dodge, writing in The Observer, says:

"The dastardly crime resulting in the loss of the Lusitania will focus the dislike and contempt felt by all Americans without the hyphen for the Teutonic tumor that infests a part of the States. As an American from New England I am happy to place on record the contempt and disgust felt by Americans for the modern German and Prussian variety of microbe."

PROPELLERS IN SIGHT AS SHIP WENT DOWN

Cuban Consul de Ayala Says the Lusitania Sank Rapidly By the Head.

LIVERPOOL, May 8.—Julian de Ayala, Consul General for Cuba at Liverpool, in an interview given to The Liverpool Echo's correspondent at Queenstown, said that he was ill in his berth when the Lusitania was torpedoed.

He was thrown against the partition of his berth by the explosion, and suffered an injury to his head and had flesh torn off one of his legs.

The boat which Mr. de Ayala got into capsized, and he was thrown into the water, but later was picked up.

The Lusitania, Mr. de Ayala said, had a heavy list to port before she sank, and great difficulty was experienced in getting out the lifeboats.

Captain Turner thought he could bring the crippled vessel into Queenstown, but she began to sink rapidly by the head.

"Her stern went up so high," Mr. de Ayala added, "that we could see all of her propellers, and she went down with a headlong plunge, volumes of steam hissing from her funnels."

BRITISH NOTABLES BRAND IT AS MURDER

Lord Derby Says Whole Civilized World Will Unite in Abhorrence of Germany.

LOOK NOW TO AMERICA

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 8.—Sir Charles Johnston, Lord Mayor of Liverpool, sent today to the London office of THE NEW YORK TIMES the following expression regarding the Lusitania disaster:

"My whole concern is so much for the innocent sufferers that it is utterly impossible for me to put into words what I feel about this exhibition of German cold-blooded barbarism. Apart from its terrible side, the outrage will only stiffen the backs of the British people to an even stronger determination to rid the world of this Prussian savagery."

"I think the Lusitania has been torpedoed deliberately for the purpose of making the United States declare war," said Lord Charles Beresford today. "I foretold the whole present situation in February, and gave my reasons for thinking that Germany meant to bring America into the war."

The following message was received from the Earl of Derby in response to a message from THE NEW YORK TIMES:

"With regard to the sinking of the Lusitania, I can only say I believe the whole civilized world will unite in abhorrence of this dastardly murder, for it's nothing else, and will wish well to Britain and her allies in their determination to stamp out this race of German murderers."

Bruce Ismay said: "In my opinion, the sinking of the Lusitania was a foul and dastardly crime."

The Lord Mayor of London said: "The City of London is filled with horror and indignation at this last outrage, which has shocked humanity, and wonders how long such wickedness will be tolerated by those in authority whose citizens are being subjected to this detestable method of warfare."

Diabolical, Say Mayors.

Joseph Hill, Mayor fo Derby, sent this message: "The townspeople of Derby are staggered by theis heinous and dastardly crime, a crime of the blackest dye, such as was never before recorded against any nation. No punishment that is known can be adequate. The retribution must surely be of the severest character."

William Don, Lord Provost of Dundee, sent this: "My feeling is one of profound sorrow for the loss of innocent lives, whatever their nationality. The dastardly action of Germany is a challenge to the civilized world. Good-bye forever to international law if the neutral nations do not demand satisfaction."

This message came from Mr. Gallagher, Lord Mayor of Dublin: "By the prearranged and wholesale murder of hundreds of non-offending passengers on the Lusitania, the Germans have passed the limit even of American patience. The crime is motiveless and purposeless. I trust our countrymen in America will now speak out against this capricious barbarism. It is time for America to act."

This is the expression of the Mayor of Stafford: "Germany has committeed a willful murder, and henceforth must be treated as an enemy of the human race."

The Mayor of Southampton wrote: "The destruction of the Lusitania is a most diabolical crime on humanity, and will create a burning anger which Germany will regret. The lurking murderers of the sea will be brought to judgment. This infamous crime will only nerve our people to such efforts as they have never yet used in the course of their history."

Sir William Haggard, the former British Minister to Brazil, expressed himself as horror stricken over the sinking of the Lusitania.

"What is America to do about it?" he asked. "Can she allow her citizens to be slaughtered on the high seas by the Germans? Are not her citizens entitled to protection and is not Germany bound to respect American rights? I should be amazed if America allowed the incident to pass. The whole world is aroused over the terrible work of the Germans and America must realize that she now has a part to play."

Pinchot Sails.

Gifford Pinchot and his wife were among the St. Paul's passengers. "I wish I could say what I think of the torpedoing of the Lusitania," said Mr. Pinchot, "but I am muzzled because I am still officially representing the American Government in the relief work for which I came, but which I was unable to perform because I could not stay in Belgium. All I can say is that the Lusitania incident is horrible, horrible. But I don't believe America will go to war on this."

Norman Angell, in an interview given to THE NEW YORK TIMES, urged an international court of neutral nations to investigate the Lusitania episode. He regarded it as the stern duty of President Wilson to initiate a thorough inquiry and advocated the President's calling upon the other neutral nations to join in the movement. Mr. Angell is on his way to America to spread a campaign among the schools, colleges and universities for an intimate study of foreign history in relation to the existing war. After the war was over, he said, the entire relations of all nations would have to be readjusted and a study of it, together with the history of all countries, would be a vital part of college curriculum. He expects to stay in America indefinitely.

"The sinking of the Lusitania is the climax of outrages of this inhuman warfare prosecuted by the Germans," said Mr. Angell. "America now must take cognizance of it. The protection of her citizens on the high seas demands it but America must not go into it hotheadedly. America must approach the investigation of the Lusitania case coolly, with the ultimate idea of ascertaining precisely what the Germans did and what the penalty must be. An international court of neutral nations ought to be organized immediately and an inquiry rapidly pushed. The international court might conclude that the torpedoing of the Lusitania was sufficient grounds for America and other neutrals to go to war with Germany. I fail to see how America can let this dastardly murder of its citizens pass." The suggestion of Colonel Roosevelt as a member of Mr. Angell's proposed court brought this comment: "I hardly think Colonel Roosevelt the man. He is too much of a Rough Rider. Ex-President Taft is more of the cool-minded American type I would suggest, but I hesitate to try to pick any individuals."

WILL FACE OUR ANGER.

Germany Fears Only God, Says the New Yorker Herold.

The New Yorker Herold said yesterday of the sinking of the Lusitania:

> Official England has declared many times that it is carrying on a war of anihilation against Germany; that it will never sign a peace treaty until the German Empirer lies shattered upon the ground, so that out of the ruins some sort of an impotent Federation of States can be pieced together. * * *
>
> The sumbarine campaign begun by Germany on the 18th of February at once excluded all chivalrous considerations, especially toward a people which has shown itself to be so notoriously perfidious and unscrupulous as England has done.
>
> Such considerations are the more out of place, since the British Government, with preference, uses the "Ocean Greyhounds" of its great shipping concerns for the swift transportation of great quantities of arms and similar contraband of war, which a generous America, in its remarkable "neutrality" places at its disposition.
>
> The German Government has in this case recently done an exceptional thing. It has, in an official advertisement made public throughout the entire nation, expressly and emphatically warned the traveling American public from using these British steamers. Every one not mentally blind must have known that it was impossible that such a warning could be meaningless and merely sent out to the empty air. The warning was almost brutally disregarded. It was called a "bluff," a "tactless," "impertinent" attempt to prevent American citizens from making use of their rights.
>
> And so the decree was fulfilled. Germany has no doubt lost, for a while, the very little sympathy which it enjoyed here. In fact, it has already had to be content with that.
>
> It will, as before, stand alone with its ally—and with its God! Him it fears—and nobody else on earth!

EXPECT MORE THAN PROTEST.

French People Eager to Learn What America Will Do.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, May 8.—The Lusitania "murder" is the sole topic in Paris. Every one is asking what America will do.

It is no exaggeration to say that France looks to America for something more than a verbal protest, however weighty, against the methods that have now cost American lives.

The general tone of the press is thus summed by the Temps:

"Let us have the courage to admit that from Germany's inhuman standpoint this crime is not useless. It may make some timid neutrals hesitate; it may strike the imagination of the feeble-hearted. But it only strengthens us in the sacred mission to save the world from the most relentless scourge that has ever devastated it."

PARIS, May 8.—The sinking of the Lusitania has aroused deep indignation here, where many passengers, notably A. G. Vanderbilt and Charles Frohman, were well known. The press characterizes the torpedoing of the steamer "as an act of supreme cruelty surpassing everything yet perpetrated and violating the most elementary sentiments of humanity."

The Matin expresses the opinion that the wave of indignation which will be provoked in America perhaps may lead Washington to take measures which will be unpleasant for Germany.

The Journal des Débâts, referring to the Lusitania says:

"The moment will come when the protestations of the human conscience will have their effect. Justice moves with heavy feet, but it manages nevertheless to find its hour.

"One is compelled today to ask the question whether Germany is not seeking to antagonize all the world in order to have an excuse in the eyes of its people for the inevitable capitulation. The torpedoing of the Lusitania is a military exploit of the same quality as the burning of Louvain and the destruction of the Rheims Cathedral."

La Liberté says:

"Germany's supreme act, coldly premeditated and prepared by its diplomats, puts the country definitely beyond the pale of nations. It is possible that there are still neutrals, that is to say indifferent people, who regard these events as Pontius Pilates?"

After characterizing the sinking of the Lusitania as a crime against all races at the same time, the writer of this editorial, Georges Berthoula, chief editor of La Liberté, asks whether the United States is now going to take its place beside the other opponents of Germany.

Leon Bailby, General Manager of the Intransigeant, writes:

"The Lusitania affair is all the more reprehensible in that one may defy the Germans to show in what way the destruction of this transatlantic liner can advance, even by one hour, the end of the war. Consequently it is a fruitless crime, without excuse. What is worse, the state of war is the pretext in this deed for commercial revenge."

The Temps says:

"In the universal terror which the Germans are organizing they seek to render all the elements their accomplices. Among all their crimes in air and on sea, no human being, traveler or simple pedestrian in the street, is any longer in complete security. To go and come has become sort of an act of faith, a manifestation of optimism.

"Let us salute with respect and pain the new victims of Germany. Let us think of the bereaved families. Let us admire the tranquil courage with which 1,300 passengers, in spite of the notice at the same time cunning and cynical, of the German Embassy, embarked on the Lusitania."

"ENDS BRITISH PRESTIGE."

German Professor Sees Proof of Navy's Inefficiency.

Special to The New York Times.

ST. LOUIS, May 8.—Dr. Eugene Kuhnemann of the University of Breslau, Germany, a noted philosopher, now German Exchange Professor to American Universities, who delivered an address here on Friday on "German Militarism," declared today that the sinking of the Lusitania by the Germans within ten miles of the English shores "ended the prestige of the English Navy forever."

Regarding the loss of life he said:

"Americans abroad that ship were responsible to no one but themselves for their lives. Every passenger on board that ship was notified personally that the Lusitania was to be sunk. The German Embassy advertised the fact in the newspapers throughout the United States and all the passengers took the trip at their own risk.

"The torpedoing of the Lusitania proves two things: First, that Germany is determined and has the power to crush any nation that tries to starve her out; second, that the prestige of the English navy is gone forever.

"It is shameful that England, with its powerful navy, is not able to protect its own commerce. With all her navy, England has been unable to protect one lonesome ship within sight of her own shores when she had advance information that the ship was to be destroyed, and knew how eager the Germans wer to wreck it."

Dr. Kuhnemann said he expected the destruction of the Lusitania, as did all who realized the efficiency of the German submarine fleet.

ANOTHER CRIME, ITALIANS SAY

Press Foresees Serious Complications with the United States.

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, May 8.—The sinking of the Lusitania has created a feeling of consternation, as up to the present the Atlantic route has been considered comparatively safe. The opinion here is that it is another most deplorable crime which Germany, with her usual shortsightedness, has not hesitated to commit against a neutral country.

The press stigmatizes it not only as a crime of lese humanity, but considers it may gravely compromise relations between America and Germany, especially as there has been great loss of life. No news has yet reached here about the passengers and crew, so the anxiety is very great.

ROME, May 8.—The Giornale d'Italia says:

"That such a large proportion of the peaceful travelers on the Lusitania lost their lives sums up the atrocity of the crime, which struck down men, women, and children, persons of all ages, conditions of life, and nationalities, who could not assist or injure either belligerent. The warning published in America against leaving on the Lusitania shows that the crime was premeditated. Thus there are no extenuating circumstances.

"The Giornale d'Italia has received the impression that America will address Germany in the firmest language."

PAGE RUSHES AID TO THE VICTIMS

Two Military Attaches Sent to Ireland with Money for American Survivors.

ANXIOUS DAY IN LONDON

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, May 8.—Ambassador Page dispatched Captains A. M. Miller and William A. Castle of the embassy early today to Queenstown with orders to aid American survivors of the Lusitania. Mr. Page gave them blank checks signed by himself in which to write in any amounts needed to supply cash to Americans who lost all in the sinking of the ship, also to look after all their wants even to purchasing clothes and paying hotel bills.

The Ambassador also instructed them to see that the bodies of Americans that reached Queenstown or any other point in Ireland were cared for until finally disposed of.

The attachés of the embassy were kept busy all today answering telephone calls of anxious Americans with friends or relatives aboard the Lusitania. American Consul Frost at Queenstown kept Mr. Page informed of the facts as fast as he got them all Friday night and today, Mr. Page in turn advising the Washington Government.

The two embassy army Captains at Queenstown will gather every detail of the facts for the further enlightenment of Washington.

Colonel E. M. House, the intimate friend of President Wilson, heard the details of the Lusitania's sinking but would not comment.

Anxious Hotel Crowds.

The bulletin boards in the Ritz-Carlton, Berkeley, Savoy, Cecil, and other hotels gave the latest details from the Cunard Line or the Admiralty on the Lusitania, and all day long these were surrounded by eager men and women.

At the Ritz, Miss Martha Allan, daughter of Lady Allan, waited all Friday night to hear whether her mother had met death. Early this morning her fears were allayed by a telegram from Orr Lewis of Montreal, a friend of the family, saying Lady Allan and her two daughters were safe and would be at the Ritz tomorrow.

Hugh Wallace of New York, stopping at the Ritz, exerted himself to ascertain if Mr. Vanderbilt, whom he knew intimately, had lost his life. After getting in touch with the officials at Queenstown, he sent a cable to the Vanderbilts in New York late today saying Alfred Vanderbilt undoubtedly had been drowned.

Charles Frohman had booked a suite at the Savoy by cable from New York before sailing on the Lusitania. Officials at the Savoy tonight said no word had come from Frohman, and they were convinced he had lost his life. At Mr. Frohman's office in the Duke of York's Theatre tonight it was also said no word had been received from him, which undoubtedly meant he had been drowned.

Samuel Knox, a well-known Steel man of New York was booked for the Carlton, but there was no word from him since the sinking of the Lusitania.

A. D. Loney and wife, with their daughter, Virginia, had booked accommodations at the Carlton. There was no word from Mr. and Mrs. Loney, but the daughter's name appears in the list of survivors. Mr. Loney left England a few weeks ago to bring his wife and daughter here. He had been engaged in Red Cross work, had given two motor cars and intended returning to the front.

SAD DAY IN LIVERPOOL.

Crowds Await News of the Crew and Passengers.

LIVERPOOL, May 8.—Rumford Street in front of the Cunard offices has been filled all day by a half stupefied crowd of relatives of members of the Lusitania's crew. Inside the offices relatives and friends of the first and second-class passengers moved to and fro in mournful quest of official information.

A. C. Luck, an American, watched the bulletin board all day long for tidings of his wife and two boys, Eldridge and Kenneth, aged 7 and 10. Although they were reported to have been saved, Mr. Luck was unable to obtain definite news of them. Meanwhile there came from California a cable message from Mrs. Luck's sister saying: "We hear that ours are safe."

Harwood Knight and his sister Elaine, of Baltimore, for whom inquiries have been made, are not on any list of survivors.

The Cunard Company sent a large office force to Queenstown early today to render assistance to survivors and obtain reliable information.

GERMANY AN 'OUTLAW NATION'

Sir George Foster, Canada's Acting Premier, Denounces "Piracy."

Special to The New York Times.

OTTAWA, Ont., May 8.—Sir George Foster, acting Prime Minister of Canada, made the following statement today regarding the sinking of the Lusitania:

"It was a fiendish and altogether unjustifiable act, contravening all established usages of war, repugnant to the moral and humanitarian sense of the world. In the worst days of piracy pirates would have scorned such a deed. It appears to have been carefully planned by the German authorities at Berlin, aided by German representatives and adherents on this side of the Atlantic.

"The object was not to prevent contraband reaching Great Britain or to destroy enemy property. These objects could have been completely and easily attained without the sacrifice of a single life. The object clearly was to seize the best possible opportunity for the sudden and ruthless destruction of as large a number of non-combatants and neutral lives as possible, with the design of intimidating present and possible belligerents, and dramatically impressing the world with the quality of 'frightfulness' which the German war code inculcates.

"The warning of a half hour would have sufficed to have saved every soul of the 2,100 on board. Then ship and cargo could have been sent to the depths and the menace and power of the German submarine fully as well demonstrated. The latest villainy has undoubtedly shocked the world as the German authorities intended should be done, but they will find that again their methods have overreached the mark.

"The British people will not be intimidated by this dastard work. It will only add to the grim determination of Britain and her allies to pursue this war to the end. But to the neutral nations of the world this last act will come as crowning evidence of German character and policy and serve to stamp Germany as the outlaw nation of the Twentieth Century, to be viewed with suspicion and horror and righteous indignation by every well-constituted civilized people. For all this Germany must face a day of final reckoning. Many generations are likely to pass before the debt will be fully expiated and Germany reinstated into honorable fellowship with the nations of the word. There is only one field left for the German war lords to exploit. That is the field of private murder and assassination, which may not improbably be next entered upon."

BARNES MAY ENLIST TAFT AND ROOT

Unwillingly Consents to Call Them in Libel Trial if Lawyers Insist.

ODELL, TOO, ON HIS LIST

Lawyers Prepare for Printing Argument — Colonel Abandons His Horseback Ride to Study Case.

Special to The New York Times.

SYRACUSE, May 8.—There is a prospect that both ex-President William Howard Taft and Elihu Root will be called to testify in the Barnes-Roosevelt libel trial, which will be resumed in the Supreme Court on Monday morning. Both will testify for William Barnes, the plaintiff, if they are called.

Mr. Taft and Mr. Root will be asked to appear as witnesses only in case Mr. Barnes's lawyers feel that their testimony will be vital to the case. Mr. Barnes is opposed to having them appear, but his lawyers may overrule him. He takes the attitude that he does not want to subject his friends to any embarrassment unless it absolutely is necessary. Neither does he want to injure the political future of any of his friends, a possible result if they appeared against Colonel Roosevelt, who still has a large political following.

The Barnes lawyers would not discuss today the possibility of Mr. Taft and Mr. Root being called, but it was admitted that if it came to the worst both men would be requested to appear. Neither will be subpoenaed as the Barnes lawyers feel that this is unnecessary, but they are sure that both men will come here if Mr. Barnes asks them to do so. Should Mr. Taft take the witness stand it is expected that he will throw light upon many events in the Colonel's political career. William M. Ivins, Mr. Barnes's chief of counsel, would like to know more about Mr. Taft's nomination for the Presidency of 1908, and whether the Colonel requested political favors. It has been charged that Mr. Roosevelt forced the nomination upon the party and used regular boss methods in doing so. Mr. Ivins also believes that Mr. Taft can dispute Mr. Roosevelt on many matters to which he has testified.

Elihu Root, Secretary of State under President Roosevelt, no longer is friendly with the Colonel, and should he take the stand many old political secrets undoubtedly would be revealed. Another witness who may be asked to testify is Senator J. W. Wadsworth. Still others who may be called are ex-Governors B. B. Odell, Jr., John A. Dix, and Martin H. Glynn. Otto C. Kelsey, former State Superintendent of Insurance, has been subpoenaed. Altogether the Barnes lawyers expect to call about twenty-five witnesses.

How many of these will be asked to take the witness stand will depend in a large measure upon the ruling on Monday of Justice William S. Andrews regarding the printing testimony that has been given. The Justice told John M. Bowers, senior Roosevelt counsel, on Friday that he would strike out all the printing testimony unless counsel could connect Mr. Barnes with the so-called printing scandals more closely than they have yet been able to do. The Justice said his mind was still open on the subject and he would hear arguments from both sides as soon as court opened.

The lawyers spent today in going over the testimony and marshaling the facts regarding printing so that Justice Andrews can pass upon it as quickly as possible. The Roosevelt attorneys realize how vital the ruling will be to their case, for should the testimony regarding printing be thrown out little if anything would be left them to show justification of the alleged libel and they would have to fall back upon mitigation evidence entirely and try to convince the jury that the Colonel did not utter the alleged libel maliciously. The Colonel is particularly exercised over the seriousness of the situation and instead of going horseback riding today he conferred most of the time with Mr. Bowers and his other lawyers.

Each side has a complete transcript of every word that has appeared on the record up to the present time, including testimony of witnesses, questions of counsel, and rulings of the court. Justice Andrews on Friday borrowed from one of the lawyers a copy of thecomplet testimony of Colonel Roosevelt, direct, cross, and re-direct, and he spent the entire day studying it.

Whether the printing testimony is permitted to remain in the record or not the defendant's case is practically completed. Mr. Bowkers has half a dozen witnesses remaining, but he thinks he can finish with them by Monday noon. If Justice Andrews strikes out of the record all the printing testimony Mr. Bowers may not call any more witnesses along that line, for it is understood that he has little more evidence that would be vittal. If it is allowed to remain he will call a few witnesses to help strengthen his case.

One of these witnesses will be Charles M. Winchester, Vice President and general manager of the J. B. Lyon Company, upon whom a subpoena was served on Friday nuight, ordering him to produce many more books which the defense hopes to establish were omang those printed by the Lyon concern with the name of The Albany Evening Journal upon them. Mr. Winchester testified on Friday that Mr. Barnes once sent for him and they had a conversation which resulted in the name of the newspaper being published in various books instead of that of the J. B. Lyon Company. Previously Mr. Winchester had been unable to recall conversations with Mr. Barnes. On Monday, Mr. Winchester will be asked to identify at least one book printed by his company for which The Albany Evening Journal received a commission. More of the private accounts of the Journal and the Lyon Company will also be examined.

As soon as the Roosevelt side is all presented the plaintiff will begin his rebuttal. Should the printing testimony remain in the record the Barnes lawyers will have to call many more witnesses than they otherwise would, because it will mean that the Justice has decided that enough evidence has been presented to connect Mr. Barnes with the operations of the so-called Printing Ring, and he will have to prove that he had no knowledge of the alleged wasteful and extravagant methods of the printing firms with which he was connected in their handling of State printing contracts. On the other hand, if the printing testimony is ruled out, Mr. Barnes's lawyers may not think it necessary for him to take the stand, and in this way the trial will be greatly shortened.

In any event, Mr. Barnes's attorneys believe that it will not take longer than the week to present their case, and that by the beginning of the following week the case will go to the jury.

STATE POLICE HEAD ANSWERS CHARGES

Denies That Pennsylvania Constabulary Were Ever Used as Strikebreakers.

SAYS HIS MEN NEVER KILL

And That Nine Troopers Have Been Shot to Death by Rioters and 17 Injured for Life.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, May 8.—Major John C. Groome, Superintendent of the Pennsylvania constabulary, and George C. Lumb, Assistant Superintendent, appearing before the Commission on Industrial Relations today, told of the accomplishments of the Constabulary and denied the assertions made by the labor leader, John C. Maurer, who testified earlier in the week, and David Williams, who was on the stand today, that the police were used as strikebreakers.

The testimony of these officials went into every feature of the work of the Pennsylvania police. The labor leader members of the commission did not press any questions after the testimony of Groome and Lumb.

"Of the 230 members of the State police, 225 are ex-United States soldiers, and 50 per cent. of these had records of excellence," said Major Groome. "Their records in the army show that they are not degenerate sons of the middle class."

Major Groome said that the statement of David Williams that a trooper had shot a citizen in Bethlehem was not true. The inquiry of the State authorities and the court records show that this man was killed with a .38-calibre bullet, while the revolvers of the troopers are .45 calibre.

The witness said that the troopers never killed a man unlawfully, and that nine troopers had been shot to death by rioters and seventeen injured for life. It was never shown that the troopers had shot a man while on riot duty, he said, and as soon as the troopers appeared order had invariably been established. He denied that the police were used as strikebreakers, saying that in the ten years the average time spent on riot duty was one day a year. The police made 24,000 arrests in ten years, from which there were 80 per cent. convictions.

David Williams, of Allentown, who was a striker at the Bethlehem Steel Works in 1910, made a number of accusing statements about the action of the police. He called Charles M. Schwab, "the star of Bethlehem." One statement he sought to offer was rejected by the commission. It was that inferior steel had been placed in certain Lehigh Valley Railroad rails and that these rails caused a wreck killing seventeen persons. Mr. Williams also said that the time had come when it was necessary for labor to arm itself. "The State Police are housed and dined," he said. "It is therefore necessary for us to protect ourselves."

Mr. Williams said that he wos opposed to a State police and National Guard. He testified that the conservative members of labor organizations in Pennsylvania favored arming themselves in order to protect themselves from the State Police.

The attitude of labor in Pennsylvania, according to Mr. Williams, is reflected in a resolution adopted by the last meeting of the State Federation of Labor instructing the Executive Council to consider the advisability of forming a semi-military organization in the ranks of labor. A report will bep resented to the federation on this subject at its meeting next week.

CHINESE ACCEPT JAPAN'S DEMANDS

Complete Surrender, Including a Promise to Consider Group V.

KIAO-CHAU TO BE RESTORED

Japanese Refugees, in Fear of War, Continue to Flock to the Coast.

PEKING, Sunday, May 9, (2:15 A. M.)—The Chinese Government has acceded to the Japanese demands as finally modified, foregoing even the right to be heard. In order to make the Chinese reply acceptable to Japan, the Government yesterday kept secretaries moving to and from the Japanese Legation, so that the legation's wishes might be ascertained.

At the beginning of the conferences last January, the Japanese Legation virtually specified who should act as the Chinese Plenipotentiaries. The Chinese acceptance of the demands is now being prepared under Japanese supervision.

When the Chinese Government presented the first draft of its reply the Japanese Plenipotentiaries objected to the long explanation contained in it. The Chinese then offered a brief blanket acceptance, but the Japanese again objected, requiring, instead, a categorical acceptance, including a specific undertaking for a future discussion of the articles of Group V. This is the group of demands that China declined to consider, the discussion of which, with the exception of the demand bearing on Fukien Province, Japan had suspended in her ultimatum.

To Restore Kiao-Chau.

The Japanese ultimatum makes an important point of Japan's intention to restore Kiao-Chau to China. It refers to the sacrifices made by Japan in the capture of Tsing-tao, but makes no mention of Great Britain's participation in this operation or of her right to participate in the adjudication.

With the exception of an unorganized boycott, there has been no movement against the Japanese resident in China, and there is no report of any attack on the Japanese.

From Dalny comes word that 20,000 Japanese refugees, with their belongings, are arriving there. Hongkong reports an exodus from Canton and other places. Shanghai reports that the Japanese are crowding the foreign settlement, and that trade is at a standstill.

TOKIO, May 8.—China has accepted the Japanese demands, according to a Peking dispatch printed in an extra edition of the Asahi.

The Foreign Office today issued a denial of the statement that during the negotiations Japan declined China's request to be permitted to take minutes of the conference on the Japanese demands. Denial also was made that China had ever demanded the restoration of Kiao-Chau.

Japanese War Preparations.

The semi-official press published today an outline of a program said to have been decided upon by the government for military and naval action against China in the event that an open rupture should occur. The program, as published in these newspapers, provided for the occupation by Japanese forces of the centers of wealth and political power of China. This penetration of Chinese territory would continue until the demands of Japan were granted.

Japan's aim in these operations would be to avoid bloodshed if possible. Chinese troops would be captured and disarmed, and not fired upon unless they offered resistance.

For the operations in the North of China, according to this program, strong forces would be landed in the Gulf of Pe-chi-li, to occupy Peking, Tien-tsin and other important points and seize the railroads. In the South important moves would be made pointly by the army and navy. Chinese vessels would be swept from the coast. The chief base of operations would be established at Tien-tsin.

It is generally estimated here that China has about 450,000 troops under arms, 300,000 having had modern military training, while the remainder belong to the old school.

The General Staff has arranged to requisition all Japanese steamers of more than 1,000 tons in case of necessity. Plans also have been made to escort Eki Hioki, Japanese Minister to China, from Peking to Tien-tsin.

Diplomatic Usage Violated?

Special Cable to THE NEW YORK TIMES.

PEKING, May 8.—The Japanese ultimatum presented Friday afternoon, postponed the consideration of Group V of the Japanese demands, those relating to Fukien Province, which were to be considered separately. The document is very long, is in Japanese, and if not accompanied by a copy in Chinese. This is regarded here as a violation of diplomatic usage, enabling Japan to present her case to the powers two days before the Chinese can do so, since the latter are hindered by the necessity of translating document into Chinese and English.

The exodus of Japanese to the coast continues, while the movement of Chinese from Manchuria is significant. The presence of large numbers of revolutionaries is reported from Shanghai. The action of the authorities in digging trenches at the Kiangnan arsenal at Shanghai is very significant. The authorities do not expect disturbances among the Chinese troops in Peking, but the presence of the notorious anti-Japanese General Changh-sun at Soochow, with 30,000 troops of uncertain loyalty, constitutes a grave peril.

The extreme limit of the Japanese ultimatum was to have been 6 P. M. today. The chief stumbling block to an agreement has been Group V. in the schedule of the Japanese demands, which provided for Japanese advisers to the Peking Government, Japanese ownership of land in China, employment of Japanese in the judiciary and police systems of China, China's purchase of munitions of war from Japan, railway concessions to Japan, Japan's right to work certain mines, and China's agreement to the propagation of Buddhism in the republic.

China on May 2 agreed to the demands of Japan with the exception of those under Group V., and, in place of them, offered to make other concessions which were rejected by the Tokio Government. In the ultimatum finally handed by Japan to China on May 8 Japan modified her demands by leaving Group V. for future discussion.

THANKED BY SPAIN'S KING.

International Institute for Girls Wins His Approbation.

The work of the International Institute for Girls in Spain not only has furnished an educational model for the Spanish Kingdom, but has helped to bring about more sympathetic relations between the United States and Spain, according to a report just made to the Board of Directors of the institute by Miss Susan D. Huntington, its Director, now in this country on leave of absence. Miss Huntington quotes a letter from Senorita Maria de Maestu, Professor of Pedagogy in the Teachers' College of Spain, who has often acted in an advisory capacity to the Spanish Minister of Education. Regarding the institute she said:

"Those of us who are seriously engaged in matters of education, which is now the problem of our country, are the first to recognize the need of an institution like yours, a model for Europe, and we realize the need it fills, because it offers broad culture and contributes much to the improvement of the Spanish woman.

"This need is more and more noticeable because Spain is founding new educational centres and the International Institute is the most efficient complement of their varied endeavors. This explains why the most notable scholars lend their prestige as the professors of the university and other institutions have done. Many give their moral support and co-operate by lecturing at the institute. They all see in this work of yours a clear expression of the wish to establish more sympathetic understanding between Spain and America."

The private secretary of King Alfonso recently paid a visit to the International Institute, to express the thanks of the King for a rare manuscript returned by Miss Helen J. Sanborn, one of its Directors, through the institute to its rightful place in the Library of Columbus at Seville.

Information Wanted.

We hope one of our younger and prettier suffragettes will drop into our elegantly appointed office some day soon and, taking us by the hand in her sisterly way, explain how it is, if a woman has such a good sense of proportion, that a well-meaning man can be arraigned as severely for not remembering where the carpet sweeper is kept when his wife wants it as if he had been caught in the act of leading at least a double life, if not a triple one.—Ohio State Journal.

PERSIAN BOOK BRINGS $610.

"Khosreo and Shiran," a Persian book of the sixteenth century, the second of the five books of "Nizami," brought the highest price of the concluding sale of Chinese and Persian antiquities at the Anderson Galleries yesterday afternoon, selling, on order, for $610. This was No. 751 of the catalogue in tooled leather covers, the margins of the leaves beautifully decorated, and containing six miniatures.

Another Persian book, No. 744, "Duvan-Hafiz," with lacquered covers, two full-page unwans and five miniatures, with illuminated pages, also sold on order, bringing $171. The Koran, No. 754, with tooled leather covers, four superb unwans at the beginning and four at the end of the book, which was richly illuminated, went to B. M. Crawford for $350. W. T. Wallace paid $285 for No. 756, a leaf of the Koran in Cufic calligraphy, eighth century, written on parchment in black, with gold and red enamel decorations.

To A. Wilkes went No. 763, a miniature painting, early sixteenth century, "Joseph's Flight from Jerusalem," for $250, and, for $170, No. 767, a Persian portfolio of painted leather.

The returns for the day were $4,239, and for the entire sale, $19,514.

TELLS HOW TO VISIT FLEET.

The New York Times Prints a Complete Guide to the Warships.

The anchorages of all the ships that will figure in the Presidential review next week appear on the chart printed on Page 1 of Section 8 of today's NEW YORK TIMES.

That page is devoted entirely to the Atlantic Fleet, and gives a description of each of the ships, together with other interesting data concerning Admiral Fletcher's great command. The program arranged for the entertainment of the officers and men of the fleet and directions how to reach any ship in the Hudson River column, are also given on that page.

GEN. GOETHALS ARRIVES.

Canal Zone Governor Will Confer with Bryan and the President.

Major Gen. George W. Goethals, Governor of the Canal Zone, arrived yesterday on the steamship Advance from Colon on his way to Washington to confer with Secretary of War Garrison on canal matters. He said that he would also confer with President Wilson on labor trouble that has developed in the Canal Zone over the rental of houses to workmen. General Goethals said he would stay in Washington for about two weeks. Landslides continued at irregular intervals in the canal, he asserted, and caused considerable delay to shipping.

"The dredging is carried on steadily," the General added, "and we think that the end is in sight so far as the shiftings of slope land are concerned."

The question of policing with Americans the two terminal cities of Panama and Colon in order to prevent future disturbances between the American soldiers stationed on the Canal Zone and Panaman police will be discussed by General Goethals and the authorities at Washington.

KNIFE MAY BE CLUE TO RIPPER MURDERS

Weapon with Stained Blade Found Near Building Where Boy Was Killed.

MORE DETECTIVES AT WORK

A hunter's knife, with a blade 6 inches long, covered with spots, which the police are examining for blood stains, was found yesterday on the roof of 507 East Seventeenth Street, a low one-story building, on the block just north of 270 First Avenue, where Charles Murray, son of Mr. and Mrs. Nicholas Murray, was killed by a "Jack-the-Ripper" last Monday night.

The knife was found by William J. Rounds, engineer in the mineral water plant of Light & Brother at 503-507 East Seventeenth Street. He had trouble with a smokestack and went to the roof of the building to find out the cause. One of the first things he noticed was a big knife. It was lying on the roof near the front of the building and could have been thrown there easily by a person walking in the street.

Rounds thought at once of the "ripper" murders, and, going to the East Twenty-second Street Station, turned the knife over to those investigating the crimes. Detectives of the Second Branch Bureau were notified, and they examined the weapon.

Many other weapons have been turned over to the police by persons finding them, and the police believe that their honeycomb search of the neighborhood where the two crimes were committed is causing many persons to discard everything that might implicate them with either the murder of Charles Murray or Leonore Anna Cohn, who was killed in the hallway of her home at 352 Third Avenue.

A man, who said he was Hammond Sachs, was arrested by Detectives Whitman and Kazinsky of the First Branch Detective Bureau last night at Second Avenue and Fifth Street. The detectives said they were told the man was seen in East Sixteenth Street on the night Charles Murray's body was found. According to the police, Sachs admitted he had been arrested in Brooklyn once for annoying little girls and sentenced to a year in prison.

He told the detectives he was in Bayonne, N. J., all last week, and on Monday night went to Mills Hotel No. 2, Rivington and Chrystie Streets. A clerk at that hotel, however, said the name of Hammond Sachs did not appear on the register Monday night. Sachs was taken to the Second Branch Bureau and questioned by detectives.

The number of detectives searching for the ripper is being increased each day, according to Second Deputy Police Commissioner Lord. Inspector Faurot explained that this was necessary because there were new clues each day. The thorough search of certain parts of the city, simply as a matter of elimination, leads the police to believe they are making progress toward a solution of the crime.

Yesterday more than ten suspects were examined by the detectives looking for the ripper, and the movements of others taken into custody previously were investigated. None of these men has been connected with the Cohn or Murray murders, according to the police.

REPUBLICAN RULES JERSEY.

President of the Senate Acting Governor for Fielder's Vacation.

Special to The New York Times.

TRENTON, N. J., May 8.—Once again New Jersey has a Republican Governor, as well as a Republican Legislature. Walter E. Edge of Atlantic City, President of the Senate, was sworn in today by Chancellor Walker, as Acting Governor. He will serve until some time in June, when Governor Fielder will return from San Francisco.

"I take seriously my elevation to this great office," the Acting Governor said. "I am one of those accidents that are bound to occur, but I do appreciate the opportunity to preside over this fine old State."

The Acting Governor also gave immediate attention to the proposed abandonment of the national guard encampment at Seagirt. He conferred with Adjt. Gen. Sadler and then announced that while there would be no encampment, all of the officers and most of the privates would receive training in special schools of instruction.

ITALY ISSUES COTTON EDICT

Bryan Notified That Restrictions from Foreign Ports Begin May 10.

The Chamber of Commerce received yesterday the following telegram from Secretary of State Bryan:

"The following cablegram was received from the American Embassy at Rome: 'The Foreign Office informs me that all raw cotton shipped from American ports May 10 will be subjected to the provisions of the Royal decree of Nov. 13 last, and only such raw cotton as may arrive with bills of lading to the named consignee and final destination will be allowed re-exportation.'"

$500 Fire in County Court House.

Clouds of smoke from the County Court House in City Hall Park early last evening attracted a large crowd. Fire in the basement storeroom, where tools, waste, and paper are stored, caused $500 damage. Deputy Chief Martin ordered fire apparatus brought into the park. No records stored in the building were damaged, according to Thomas Wisker, the janitor.

FREE MRS. CARMAN STAGE TEMPTS HER

Lawyer Says He and Woman Tried for Mrs. Bailey's Death Are "Broke."

FIND VERDICT IN AN HOUR

Jury Acts Quickly on Charge That the Case Hinges on Negro Maid's Story.

FORGIVES HER ACCUSERS

Defendant, Back in Her Home, Says She Looks Forward to Happiness Now.

Special to The New York Times.

MINEOLA, L. I., May 8.—A verdict of no guilty was brought in by the Carman jury at 5:30 o'clock this afternoon, one hour and ten minutes after the jury had left the room. Shortly afterward Mrs. Carman's lawyer, George M. Levy, when asked if Mrs. Carman would go on the vaudeville stage said:

"As things stand now she has no intention of going into vaudeville. We can't tell what may come up, however. If some colossal offer comes along we can't tell whether we'll take it." The word "we," it was explained, was used in reference to the Carman family, and Mrs. Levy. Mrs. Carman stood beside her young attorney when he made the announcement, but she did not comment on it. Mr. Levy said in explanation of his statement: "Mrs. Carman, Dr. Carman, and I are 'borke'." Mrs. Carman testified yesterday that she had no money left.

The case went to the jury at 4:20 o'clock, after Supreme Court Justice Abel Blackmar had delivered a charge to the jury, in which he asserted that if the jurymen did not accept Celia Coleman's story as true they must acquit Mrs. Carman. Celia Coleman was the colored servant who worked in the Carman home when Mrs. Lulu D. Bailey of Hempstead was shot and killed in Dr. Carman's office on June 30. It was not until she had been taken from the Carman house as a witness for the State that she accused Mrs. Carman of the murder. On the second day after the shooting she signed an affidavit drawn up by Mr. Levy, in which she said she had no knowledge that Mrs. Carman was guilty.

Quick Verdict a Surprise.

Many of the persons who had crowded the courtroom while counsel for the defense summed up this morning and while the District Attorney delivered his argument this afternoon and the Justice delivered his charge left the Court House, anticipating a long wait before the jury returned. The jury at Mrs. Carman's first trial was out all of Saturday night and returned to the courtroom about 11 o'clock on Sunday morning to announce a disagreement.

When word was passed around the Court House corridors and in a lot next door, where some of the spectators had started a ball game, that the jury was about to return there was a rush for the courtroom. Mr. Carman did not take the seat which she occupied during the trial, but moved up to the railing near the jury's foreman, while other members of the Carman family grouped themselves around the counsel table. After the jury had filed into the box the Clerk, Samuel Ransom, asked if a verdict had been reached, and the foreman of the jury, Peter Roirbach, Jr., of Sea Cliff, announced, "We find the defendant not guilty."

Applause from the spectators, many of whom were neighbors of Mrs. Carman, followed the foreman's announcement. Mrs. Carman had already been assured by Mr. Levy that the verdict would be favorable, and she only smiled faintly when it was announced. The jurymen filed out of their box, and she shook hands with each of them in turn and thanked them. Standing beside her was her 10-year-old daughter, Elisabeth. Several of the jurymen smiled and patted the little girl on the head before shaking hands with the mother.

Mrs. Carman Returns to Freeport.

For a few minutes Mrs. Carman and members of her family received the congratulations of the friends that crowded about them. Dr. Carman did not seem at all surprised at the outcome of the second trial, and did not shake hands with Mrs. Carman and congratulate her. On leaving the courtroom Mrs. Carman returned to the county jail in the rear of the Court House to get her belongings, and then left in an automobile for Freeport. She said she had no definite plans for the immediate future, but would go away probably for a rest next week.

The foreman of the jury said that the juryman had decided not to talk about anything that had occurred while they were considering the verdict.

"We've had a hard test," he said, "and the less said the better."

It was learned that the jury voted for acquittal on their first ballot, which was taken at 5:17 o'clock after less than an hour's deliberation. District Attorney Smith said after the verdict had been announced:

"We would rather have had an acquittal than a second disagreement anyhow."

The same sentiment was expressed by William B. Bailey, the husband of the woman who was murdered in Dr. Carman's home.

In summing up the case for the defense at the morning session, Mr. Levy played on the sympathies of the jurymen, and at one time tears could be seen in the eyes of both Mrs. Carman and her little daughter, who sat in plain view of the jury box. He said the District Attorney had been unfair. He talked for two hours and twenty minutes, making a vigorous attack on Celia Coleman's testimony, but making no explanation of the testimony to the effect that an effort had been made by a detective employed by the defense to bribe the negro servant to change her story.

Levy Assails District Attorney.

The District Attorney, Mr. Levy asserted, had put "catch questions" to Mrs. Carman when she was on the stand, and the lawyer said that the emphasis Mr. Smith put on the fact that the Carman family had congregated in Mrs. Carman's room after the shooting was "eminently, terribly, unfair." He trusted, he said, that the jury would "throw all the mud out of the case." He called attention to the fact that the State had produced no actual eye witness of the shooting, and referred repeatedly to the "perjurious testimony of a South Carolina negress." She was letter perfect on her main story, he said, but weak on details. Celia Coleman, he said, had her present story of the shooting hammered into her by slow process.

Mr. Levy disposed of the bribery charge by saying that it was his opinion that Hicks, the detective whom the defense employed and who, two of the prosecution's witnesses testified, tried to bribe Celia Coleman, "ought to be tied in a bag with Celia Coleman and Toomer, the woman's cousin, and thrown into the river." Mr. Levy said that the reason he didn't put Hicks on the stand was because he couldn't believe him.

"If there was any mistake in sending this man South, blame it on Mr. Graham and on me, but don't blame it on that poor woman," exclaimed Mr. Levy.

"Mrs. Carman wants either liberty or death," he proclaimed. He said that to her Sing Sing would be the same as death.

Mr. Smith, the district attorney, after recess, divided the case of the defense into two parts. One he called "manufactured, made-to-order defense;" the other "a family defense." He said that the presentation of some of the testimony included in the first class was an insult to the intelligence of the jury and was presented to get the minds of the jurymen away from the point at issue, under pretense of reasonable doubt. He took considerable time to point out the difference between photographs of the Carman premises entered by the defense and prosecution, arguing that the defense had attempted to mislead the jury, and laid stress on contradictions in testimony offered by witnesses for the defense.

Smith Criticises the Police.

"Why is it that the defense has been so industrious to lead you away from the Carman household?" he asked. "Doesn't the evidence show that since the very night of the murder the attitude of the Carman household has been to lead attention away?" The rest of the defense, he said, was based on testimony offered by interested parties. Even without Celia Coleman, he said, one couldn't conceive any theory which would point to another than Mrs. Carman as the guilty person. The Freeport police, he said, had not done their duty after the murder, thus making it difficult to get evidence.

Mr. Smith said that Mr. Levy's assertion that he went to the Carman house after the crime to extend his sympathy was a "sham," and called attention to the fact that preparation of Mrs. Carman's defense was begun before she was accused of the crime. If Celia Coleman saw or heard nothing of the crime, as the defenseContended, he said, "why did Levy think it was necessary to get an affidavit from her?"

Justice Blackmar's Charge.

Justice Blackmar delivered a forty-minute charge to the jury in which he defined the four degrees of murder and manslaughter and told the jury to consider the testimony of character witnesses as direct testimony in favor of the defendant.

"After careful consideration of the case," he said, "I have decided that unless you accept the testimony of that colored girl, you've got to acquit the defendant." This, he said, was because her testimony was the only evidence offered to show that Mrs. Carman actually had fired the shot. The other testimony merely tended to show motive, he asserted.

Mrs. Carman, Dr. Carman, and Mr. Levy talked to reporters in the Warden's Office in the jail after the verdict had been announced.

"I am so happy I don't know what to do," Mrs. Carman said. "The Judge's charge was fine and fair, don't you think so? I had no doubt of the jurors, though, from the moment we started to put in testimony. The jury couldn't do anything but acquit. I couldn't be happy last Winter with the shadows of this suspicion hanging over my head, but now I shall be able to go away and be myself again.

"I have no particular ill-feeling against anybody now. Celia Coleman, I think, is not vicious. I believe that she probably meant well, but has told this story so often that she actually believes it herself now."

Mrs. Carman said that when the prosecution was putting witnesses on the stand she was worried, partly because she was unable to convince two jurous of her innocence at the last trial. Mr. Levy said that some friends had advised him to bring an action against Celia for perjury, but, he asserted, he would not waste time on it.

BEATEN SENSELESS SAVES FIRM'S CASH

Bookkeeper Holds Fast to $1,500 for Payroll When Attacked by Hold-up Men.

ONE ASSAILANT CAUGHT

While Albert Hiltpold, bookkeeper for the Samuel Cupples Envelope Manufacturing Company, at 7 to 11 Laight Street, lay unconscious yesterday just before noon in the hall leading to his firm's office, with one hand doubled under him holding the satchel with the money he had just drawn for the firm's payroll and the other holding a long strip of cloth which he had torn from the trousers of one of the two robbers who had attempted to hold him up, a mounted policeman was urging his horse through the traffic of Varick Street in pursuit of a man he had seen running from the building.

The fugitive gained headway, and the pursuer, who was Patrolman Blass of Traffic Squad A, jumped from his horse and continued the chase through the traffic on foot. He had gone half a block when he found the man he sought, crouching between two large packing cases on a truck which was drawn up against the curb. This man told Blass he was the driver of the truck, but when he saw that Blass noticed the tear in his trousers he jumped from the truck and hit the policeman in the face. Blass drew his pocket club, and used it so well that at Police Headquarters several stitches were taken in the prisoner's head.

When Blass brought his captive back to where Hiltpold lay, the bookkeeper, who had been by this time restored to consciousness, identified him as one of his assailants. It was found that the piece of cloth he had torn from the robber's trousers fitted the rent in the prisoner's clothing, and the material was the same as that of his suit. The prisoner said he was Joseph Berger of 53 East 103d Street, and he was locked up at Headquarters on a charge of assault and attempted robbery.

Hiltpold said his bag contained $1,500. His two assailants hid in the break of the stairway leading to the office, he asserted, and as he got to this place they sprang out at him. One was armed with an ordinary blackjack, and the other had a double-headed hammer wound with tape. With these they attacked the bookkeeper. He called for help before he seized Berger. In the fight he was severely beaten, but he held on to his satchel, and the robbers, alarmed by his struggles, ran from the building. Witnesses say the man who escaped joined another who had been waiting outside, both going down Thompson Street. As Berger ran from the building Patrolman Blass saw him and pursued him.

Hiltpold was treated by an ambulance surgeon and went home. The police say they found the two weapons used in the assault in the hall.

W. V. CLEARY AND OTHERS INDICTED BY JURY

Former Town Boss Who Killed Son-in-Law Is Still Missing.

Special to The New York Times.

HAVERSTRAW, N. Y., May 8.—The Grand Jury of the Rockland County branch of the Supreme Court, which had been in session for the past month, returned over thirty indictments, five of which were against William V. Cleary, who shot and killed Eugene Newman in July last, and five others connected with him in official capacities. Justice Arthur S. Tompkins presided and fixed bail for the indicted ones.

The indictments found against Cleary included one for violation of the Sullivan law, which was actually returned last week, and on the strength of which a bench warrant was issued by Judge Mills, with which officers have been searching for Cleary without success. The indictments also included charges of grand larceny, embezzlement, and malfeasance in office.

Extra efforts will now be made to find Cleary, who has not been seen to enter or leave his home in New York City, which has been under surveillance for the past month.

Supervisor Josiah Felter, an eyewitness to the shooting, was also indicted on six counts, one of which was for grand larceny. Bail was fixed in his case at $5,000, which was furnished by his brother.

There were three indictments brought in against Overseer of the Poor Warren Baisley, who signed and indorsed checks to the amount of $7,000 at the request of Cleary. His bail was also fixed at $5,000, and was soon furnished.

Bernard J. Fox, another eyewitness, was indicted for perjury in his testimony at the time of Cleary's trial for murder. A bond of $5,000 was furnished for him by Henry Adler, a wealthy liquor dealer. The other two were Charles Seibold and Frank Hughs, each indicted for violation of the Sullivan law on the day of the shooting by taking a revolver from Fox immediately after Cleary shot Newman.

It was brought out before the Grand Jury that the amount of the poor funds that have been misappropriated by Cleary is considerably over $40,000.

ATTRIBUTE FIRE TO THIEVES

Dark Lantern Found in Ruins of Mineola Store.

MINEOLA, L. I., May 8.—The general store of Frederick Unser, one of the largest on Long Island, was wrecked early today by fire and water, and when firemen were searching the ruins they found a dark lantern. Mr. Unser said he had no such thing in stock, and it is believed now that burglars accidentally set the place afire. The store was robbed of $5,000 worth of goods a year ago. The damage today was estimated at $20,000.

Mr. Unser and his family were asleep in an extension and were aroused by Thomas Patters, who, returning from a dance, saw the fire and kicked on their door until the family awoke.

Fawn Swims Up to Babylon Landing

Special to The New York Times.

BABYLON, L. I., May 8.—A fawn, scarcely a year old, tried today to clamber up the boat float of Captain John Clunie café on Great South Bay. No one knows where it took to the water, but as a crowd of men ran out of the café the fawn slid off the float and swam under the State pier. It refused to come out until several men got into a rowboat and dislodged it. Then it made for the opposite side of the bay and, swimming so swiftly that it outdistanced the rowboat, it disappeared in the woods on the country place of R. H. McCurdy.

DERNBURG TAKES UP PEACE 'PRINCIPLES'

Believes Readjustment of Colonial Possessions Will Be a Prime Requisite.

THE "STRONG" NEED ROOM

Wants All Uncivilized Parts of the Globe Apportioned and Use of Colored Troops Forbidden.

Special to The New York Times.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, May 8.—Dr. Bernard Dernburg, known as the unofficial mouthpiece of Germany, addressed about 500 members of the City Club this afternoon. He was applauded several times, and created laughter at one point, when he made a humorous reference to neutrality. An attempt to heckle him, started by two or three in the audience, failed completely.

"What about the Lusitania?" was the question hurled at him just as he closed his talk. The demand created a sensation in the audience, but there was loud hissing, and Dr. Dernburg paid no attention to the question.

Dr. Dernburg discussed the "principles" which would have to govern any peace negotiations. He said:

"The World war has broken all relations that existed between the warring peoples, especially in the nature of treaties. All treaties of commerce and navigation between Germany, Austria, and Turkey on the one side, and England, Russia, France, Belgium, Japan, Servia, and Egypt on the other, have ceased to exist. A number of other treaties, not directly between nations at war, have proven unsatisfactory; especially has the status of China been completely changed. The law of nations, notably the law regulating oversea commerce in times of peace and of war, has completely broken down. The rules of warfare are, so says each of the contending factions, most grossly violated by the other. The Geneva Convention has failed in a number of instances to protect the Red Cross.

"At no time during the history of the world has so complete a disorganization in one form or another of rights and regulations occurred. Every peace that is concluded must rearrange all these relations. It is even more than doubtful whether treaties regarding international civil law, as, for instance, the law on bills of exchange, extradition of prisoners, mutual help by courts, are yet subsistent.

"Never has the world had such a chance to start again to erect international relations from a rock bottom basis. It stands to reason that if the time for peace negotiations comes, they will last very long—indeed; and a very long period will intervene during which all intercourse will remain in a state of suspense.

"It is, therefore, most essential that the questions involved be broached on very broad lines. We must find principles that recommend themselves by their simplicity and usefulness to all the world and we must find guarantees that will prove reliable safeguards against any infraction of those simple principles, in order that a recurrence of this general upheaval can be successfully avoided for some measurable time.

The Principles Proposed.

"These principles are probably:

"First.—the recognition of the truth that strong nations showing great vitality and large increase are entitled to enough soil, air, and water, in order to maintain and advance their growing population. The lack of such proper adjustment of the conditions of the European powers during the last fifty years has been one of the primary causes for unrest in Europe and one of the principal dangers to the peace of the world.

"Second.—Since no readjustment of this kind can take place in Europe itself on account of national lines, it is necessary to seek the solution, first, by the apportioning of all uncivilized parts of the globe; that is, by a readjustment of colonial possessions, then by the creation of spheres of influence and non-interference with nations, who are willing to take and concede such spheres; further, by an open door and equal opportunity policy all over the globe; and, finally, the neutralization of all the seas and narrows, cables, and oversea mails of the world.

"This readjustment must be sanctioned through a simple and codified international law, safeguarded in a way that it cannot be broken without putting the infractor outside of the pale of international relationship, not only with the party attacked, but also with all the parties remaining neutral.

"Unless we go to the root of the whole trouble we shall never beable to come to something really permanent, stable, and satisfactory.

"It seems manifest that such a program would be greatly to the interest of the United States. It would certainly be to the interest of Germany, but I wish to show to you that it is also in the interest of the rest of the world, and that no great nation would be asked to give up anything which she holds by right.

Assails "Fortified" Sea.

"Of course, the dominion of the sea claimed and held by Enugland is nothing but a great wrong; it has never been sanctioned by any international law and is against the governing principle that o territorial right exists outside of the three-mile limit from the shores of each country. Yet, England has fortified the sea, (which is nobody's property in particular, but under the international law everybody's) by a number of sea fortresses, each being a coaling station, whence British men-of-war can get supplies, oil, and coal, and force her will upon the rest of the globe.

"Nobody can deny that, even in time of peace, traffic over-sea is carried on only by British tolerance and that by blocking up the arteries of trade Great Britain can force and has forced her will upon all the world. The British dominion, according to British theory, commences at the three-mile limit of every nation, as can be seen from the British men-of-war hovering outside Sandy Hook for months past. But, in the reconstruction to come, the world will not be "tolerated" on its property, but will own it in fee simple.

"It has been contended that Great Britain has exercised her dominion of the seas always in a tolerant way in times of peace and that she can be trusted to continue to do so. But how many of the ideas that Great Britain was believed to stand firmly for have been abandoned since the commencement of the war? Indeed, her whole policy has undergone a change. How she has treated international sea law the protests of the United States have sufficiently shown. For centuries back she has had the policy of the balance of power, but now she proclaims the crushing of Germany into a second-rate power.

"The Turks have been obliged to keep the Dardanelles closed at English command; now, unless she is shamming, as many believe, she is trying to break through the Dardanelles, in the interest of Russia. Has Great Britain not stood for an open door policy in China and for the preservation of the integrity of the Celestial Empire, and yet is she not now paying the full price to Japan for helping to drive the Germans out of the Far East? Has she not always considered herself a trustee of the white race in defending her superior culture and intelligence against the superior numbers of colored people of the world, and does she not now bring in Indians and negroes, Fiji Islanders, and all sorts of subject races in order that her sons may be spared to fight?

"Great Britain knows the crime she is perpetrating against the future of the white race; she knows the mentality of her colored allies, whom she is now teaching that they are the real thing, that the white cannot fight or decide their own feuds without the decisive help of the colored races. There are thinking Englishmen, experienced in colonial affairs, who know the enormity of the action, and they shudder in thinking out the consequences of the short-sighted policy.

"There will be a different Asia henceforth, and, instead of the beneficial and educational preponderance of the white race on the strength of its superior experience and its conquest of nature, there will be a constant menace from these people as a consequence of a policy that is sure to break up, at the very first opportunity, the British Asiatic empire.

"It must, therefore, be stipulated in any peace instrument that the use of colored troops in any struggle in which a white nation of the white race is a belligerent must not be permitted, and that furthermore the stipulation of Berlin and the Congo agreement shall be revised and strengthened, whereby colonial possessions are considered as neutralised and must be kept so during any war in which European nations are the principals.

Says World Trade Must Be Free.

"This is not the way to keep the white man's trust. No mission affecting the rest of the world can be conferred on Great Britain. So the dominion of the sea must be placed definitely in the hands of all the powers of the world. This world of ours is very narrow; its progress rests largely on the interchange of goods, especially raw stuffs against manufactured products. Every nation must import raw stuffs and pay either with exports of such or of manufactured goods. It can only be done across the sea and never efficiently unless there be an open door policy.

"This means that no nation should discriminate against any other nation and that no colonies should be permitted to do so, either as between their mother country and themselves, or as between the colonies and other nations. Only in this way a full development in the interest of every consumer and every producer is possible. The easier this change of produce, the smaller the barriers, the better it is. If for fiscal or for other reasons these barriers cannot be broken, they should be made equal to every comer.

"It is generally claimed that Great Britain is a free-trade country, but that is not so, though Great Britain is indeed open to all the world on equal terms. The dominions, however, are not open on equal terms; they have preferential tariffs from 10 to 15 per cent., in favor of their mother country, favoring British manufacturers, and as these dominions are a very large part of the globe, three times as big as the United States, the British Empire is not an open door proposition, but just those countries that can absorb manufactured produce are closed to the exporting nations, with the exception of the motherland.

"It follows also that cable and mails must b eneutralised so as not to be under the dictation of any one power.

"What is the alternative? If this program cannot be carried out, if we are not to have an open sea and a free intercourse, we shall have Chinese Walls around all the countries. It is very simple to see, if at all times the countries cannot rely on the importation of the necessary raw produce, food stuffs and the possibility of exports, they must become self-supporting and self-sufficient. If they cannot rely on getting the best goods from the cheapest markets, they must surround themselves with customs barriers and other devices to foster the home production of food stuffs at high cost, the production of substitutes for the best raw stuffs, and home consumption to the exclusion of imports.

"And since no nation can entirely subsist on that principle, they must go on to have enormous armies, and especially enormous fleets at sea, and spend the national resources in peace needlessly, for fear of a recurrence of this war. Then all the hatred and all the jealousy, all the uneasiness will remain.

Might Return Belgium.

"The decision whether there is to be a free and neutralized sea or a Chinese Wall will also be decisive regarding the fate of Belgium. If the sea remains fortified there can be no choice for Germany except to have her own sea fortdess as well, and since the only way of getting out into the high sea would be by way of Belgium, there would be no possibility of Germany's considering the return of Belgium to its former status. On the other hand, if the sea be free and neutralized, so that every craft, of whatever nation, could ply on it at any time, either in war or in peace, and if the Channel were neutral as well as the other narrows, the return of Belgium could be considered, it then not being any longer of vital interest to Germany, although popular sentiment might clamor for her retention, the country having been won in war by sacrifice of life and treasure.

"Therefore, this chance of regulating what has been in the light of events an unnatural status of world relations must not be allowed to pass by; because after all this world consists of men who have a right to happiness, security, and prosperity; and historical developments must be corrected, if it does not give these rights of nature to every peaceful and civilized citizen of the world, together with the freedom of institutions, without which none of these rights can be maintained, advanced, or enjoyed.

"The advancement of humanity rests on a good understanding between nations; all friction retards. The welfare of man increases as the necessities of life become abundant and cheaper, and as scientific progress safeguards life and limb by producing useful inventions. Spiritual progress follows physical development, and so, if we remove all the barriers which tend to keep the people against one another through ill-feeling, malice, and jealousy, we are really doing something for the progress of the world at large and bring nearer that brotherhood of men for which we pray, but which we have been unable to attain. May this great and momentous hour find a generation worthy of its task!

"I have been told that in discussing peace a nation shows its weakness, and that such talk can be helped. In the second place, I have always thought it profitable to speak out my conviction without regard to what inference somebody might draw from my doing so.

"I can do that so much the more freely since Germany so far has been entirely victorious, holding as very large share of the territory of the enemies, blocking the English fleet in its harbors, and being abundantly provided with men, means and money, while her enemies are predicting her early downfall and resort to every device in order to dupe public opinion abroad. I just invite you to an inspection of the map showing the German lines.

"So I feel justified to speak up at this time, not because I feel that my country is beaten, but because I feel she is the only strong one, who could speak up without justified misrepresentation."

LIBAU CAPTURED, BERLIN REPORTS

Land Attack on Baltic Port Supported by Guns of Baltic Squadron.

GALICIAN DRIVE CHECKED

Petrograd Says Counter Attacks and Great Losses Have Weakened Austro-Germans.

TRAPPED DIVISION ESCAPES

Cuts Way Through After Being Surrounded—Germans Estimate 70,000 Russians Taken in a Week.

LONDON, Sunday, May 9.—Conflicting reports of the fighting in the Baltic provinces of Russia and in Western Galicia and the Carpathians continue to be issued by the War Offices of Berlin, Vienna and Petrograd.

An official bulletin issued by the German General Staff yesterday announced that on Friday the port of Libau was captured after an attack by land and sea. The Russian official announcement issued last night makes no mention of the loss of Libau, but says that a German torpedo boat was sunk by a mine during bombardment of the port on Friday by cruisers and torpedo boats.

While Vienna and Berlin announce that in West Galicia the victorious advance of the Austro-German armies continues; that all the passes in the Beskids with the exception of Lupkow have been taken and that Russian columns on the northern slopes of the Beskids are surrounded, Petrograd says that the Austro-German offensive is weakening after unsuccessful frontal attacks, that the Fifty-eighth Russian Division, under General Korniloff, was surrounded during the army's retreat in the direction of Dukla, but cut its way through, though with heavy losses, and rejoined the parent corps.

The German official estimate is that about 70,000 Russians have been captured since the end of April. Petrograd reports that the losses of the Austro-Germans have been enormous.

Libau Attacked by Land and Sea

BERLIN, May 8 (via London.)—Official announcement was made by the German War Office today in the following bulletin, that the City of Libau, Province of Courland, Russia, had been captured by the Germans:

In the Eastern theatre of the war:

The troops we sent against the City of Libau took possession of this town yesterday. Sixteen hundred prisoners, eighteen cannon, and four machine guns fell into our hands.

In the advance of our troops our Baltic Sea forces supported the attack by a bombardment from the sea.

The pursuit of the defeated army by the army under General Mackensen and such troops of our allies as joined this army was continued steadily throughout yesterday. Our advance forces crossed the river Wisloka in the neighborhood of Krosno yesterday evening.

The joint action of all parts of the army engaged in this advance led to the cutting off of not inconsiderable Russian forces. Consequently, the total number of prisoners taken in the Galician arena since the end of April should so far have been increased to about 70,000 men. Thirty-eight cannon, including nine of heavy calibre, have been taken from the Russians.

Wisloka River Line Reached.

VIENNA, (via London,) May 8.—The Austrian Official Press Bureau today gave out the following:

Headquarters in Galicia report that the victorious battel waged by the Austro-German troops in West Galicia continues. Advancing forces of Austrians and Germans have reached the Wisloka River from Jaslo to Pilsno, while detachments have obtained a firm foothold on the other bank.

All the passes in the Beskid Mountains, with the exception of Lupkow, are in the hands of the Austro-Germans. The Russian columns surrounded on the northern slopes of the Beskids are making desperate efforts to break through.

The fighting probably will last some time before the Russians are destroyed, as the battlefield is on most difficult ground.

The Russians are making fierce attacks in East Galicia in order to relieve the western front, but these attacks are unsuccessful.

Russians Report Successes

PETROGRAD, May 8.—The following official statement was issued by the War Office tonight:

German cruisers and torpedo boats appeared in the vicinity of Libau yesterday and bombarded the port. One of the enemy's torpedo boats was sunk by one of our mines.

To the southwest of Mitau our offensive is developing successfully. There were engagements yesterday in the direction of Poneviej, Beslagola, and Rossieny, (in the Baltic provinces.)

To the west of the Niemen skirmishes of an obstinate character brought to light the fact that the enemy advance guards and outposts are in the district of the upper Szeszupe.

In the direction of Mlawa we repulsed yesterday a new German attack against the Pomicany farm.

On the left bank of the Vistula all is quiet.

Between the Vistula and the Carpathians obstinate fighting continued on Friday. The attacks of the enemy, which were made along most of the front and which were in the nature of frontal attacks, met with no success. The enemy, who has suffered enormous losses, is showing signs of fatigue, while our counter-attacks are becoming more frequent.

During our retreat in the direction of Dukla large forces of the enemy occupied the roads and surrounded the Fifty-eighth Division on all sides. Nevertheless this division, under the leadership of General Korniloff, cut its way through the ranks of the enemy and succeeded, with heavy losses, in rejoining its parent corps yesterday.

There has been only occasional firing in the direction of Stryi.

On Friday, on the upper Lomnitza, certain elements of the enemy which had ascended the mountain range of Yavornik were repulsed with heavy losses.

VALUE OF LIBAU TO GERMANY.

Capture Part of Plan to Cut Communications of Russians in Poland.

The taking of Libau, on the Baltic Sea, by the Germans, is not, in Russian opinion, frequently put forth in the Petrograd press, considered so important as a possible base for developing a naval campaign in the Baltic as it is in its strategic land aspects as opening the way to an assault upon the two northern lines of communication by which the entire Russian Army in Poland is fed.

Four years ago Russia began to construct a naval base at Libau, and up to July, 1914, had spent millions of rubles; but the shifting ground of the harbor caused the engineers to discourage the work. When the war broke the Government had removed most of its naval stores to Riga.

Riga, which the Germans will also attempt to capture, is, next to Petrograd, Russia's greatest port in the Baltic region. It is the capital of the Government of Livonia, on the Drina, five miles from the Gulf of Riga, and 312 miles southwest from Petrograd. Libau is 130 miles almost due west from Riga, whose connecting line from the base of the Courland peninsula, which is bounded on the west by the Baltic and on the east by the Gulf of Riga.

Libau was the principal port of departure for trade with Denmark, and, aside from its shipping interests, manufactured machinery and had a large number of flour and lumber mills. It was also a favorite watering place for the people of Courland.

Twenty-five miles southwest of Riga and 105 southeast of Libau is Mitau, near which the Russian cavalry raids reached in the first few days of the month. Mitau is 350 miles from Petrograd.

It will thus be seen that the line Riga-Mitau forms the common base of two triangles with the vertex of one at Libau and the vertex of the other at Petrograd. Southwest of this double triangle is Kalwarja, near Suwalki, where the Russian counter attacks were made to cut off the raiders.

An extension of the line Riga-Mitau, 157 miles northeast, would penetrate the forest of Peipus, which begins at Dorpat, is 300 miles long, and bars the old northern highway to Petrograd.

It has been assumed by the Russian General Staff that once the Germans develop their left to the line Dorpat-Riga-Mitau, possibly by covering Riga, they would endeavor to advance on Petrograd along two lines: One from the direction of Königsburg and Insterburg, through Wirballen, Kovno, Doinsk, Pskov, &c., skirting the Peipus forest on the south; the other, the main road from Revel via Narva, a much shorter distance, as it runs along the southern coast of the Gulf of Finland.

At the beginning of the war the Russian naval authorities came to the conclusion that Revel, which lies at the entrance to the Gulf of Finland, and not Libau, was the more suitable harbor for fortifications as well as a strategic base from which an army might operate against a force seeking either of the roads to Petrograd. A permanent army of 150,000 men was therefore installed there. A treble row of mines was laid from Revel to Hanga, the most southwesterly point of Finland, thus guarding the entrance to the gulf.

On the land side Revel was turned into a fortified camp, and so was Hanga, which together form the keys to Petrograd from the sea. They are like Gibraltar and Ceuta at the entrance to the Mediterranean.

DARDANELLES GUNS PARTLY SILENCED?

Forts Up to Nagara No Longer Reply to the Fire of the Fleet.

ALLIES TO LAND MORE MEN

A Belated Turkish Report Says the Allied Land Forces Were Defeated Wednesday.

PARIS, May 8.—A dispatch from Tenedos to the Havas Agency says that, athough the bombardment of the Dardanelles forts is being continued by the allied fleet, all of the Turkish batteries as far up the strait as Nagara, at the end of the narrows nearest Constantinople, have ceased firing, and apparently have been destroyed.

A message from Athens to the Havas Agency says that the bombardment of the Dardanelles fortifications, after being carried on all day Thursday, was resumed yesterday, and that the Allies are preparing to disembark another landing force.

The situation of the Greeks in Turkish Thrace is represented as critical, and thousands of them, including the entire population of many villages, are said to have fled.

CONSTANTINOPLE, May 6, (via London, May 8.)—In one hour yesterday (Wednesday at noon the Turkish infantry broke down an allied attempt at a forward movement at Sedd-el-Bahr. Although the allied attack was well prepared for by the ships' guns, they were put to full flight. Near Avi Burnu the Turkish forces also were successful.

TURKS ADMIT HEAVY LOSS.

But Say They Checked Allied Landing Parties May 2 and 3.

DARDANELLES, May 5, (via London, May 8.)—The operations against the Gallipoli Peninsula are considered as one great movement against the strait. The landing points were Sed-el-Bahr and Gabatepel, where the fighting was very severe throughout the nights of May 2 and 3. The Turkish Headquarters says there has as yet been no decision, but that the situation is regard as favorable for the Ottomans.

The Turkish troops behaved splendidly, inflicting great losses on the Allies, but they suffered heavily themselves, especially in officers.

Headquarters says the Allies did not succeed in advancing, but that, on the contrary, the Turks moved their lines toward the coast, and this despite the fact that the British and French had every modern facility and made use of the heavy artillery of the fleet to assist the landing operations. The Turkish troops were unable to live within the range of the guns.

A captive balloon was of great aid to the Allies in informing them of the range for incendiary bombs, which burned the inner strait towns. Today a British airman dropped twelve bombs on the Asiatic coast, butonly slight damage resulted.

It is denied here that Turkish aeroplanes have been brought down at Tenedos, or that any of them have been hit. It is asserted, on the contrary, that Turkish fliers have successfully thrown bombs on the Allies' warships, wharves, and troops.

Best & Co.

Fifth Avenue at Thirty-fifth Street.

THESE annual May white sales at Best's have been so well attended and so remarkably successful that it may be necessary to make it clear that there is just as wide a selection now as there was at the beginning of the sales.

The assortments have been added to by new lots, all from our regular manufacturers, and, in fact, planned for even before these sales started. But for our preparedness we would now be in the embarrassing position of holding sales when most of the goods had gone.

So if you have not yet shopped the white sales, there is still plenty of time to do it and to prove for yourself, too, that "you never pay more at Best's."

NEW YORK HAILS ATLANTIC FLEET

15 BATTLESHIPS IN HUDSON

With the battleship Louisiana, flagship of Rear Admiral Walter McLean, commanding the Fourth Division of the United States Atlantic Fleet, leading the way, fifteen of the sixteen first and second line armorclads that are to figure in the two Presidential reviews of next week arrived in the Hudson shortly before 10 o'clock yesterday morning. It was the home-coming of the fleet, so to speak, after an absence of three years, and the greeting the big fighting craft received as they swept slowly and majestically up the bay and into the Hudson was described by one of the officers as one of the most courteous and genuinely sincere ever accorded the great organization, now commanded for the first time by an officer whose rank is that of Admiral of the Fleet.

Every tug, every ferryboat, and every other kind of craft with a flag dipped its colors in salute as the ships that go to make up the "backbone" of America's defense swept by. The gunboat Dolphin was anchored down the bay as the fleet came in, and to her gunners went the honor of firing the first salute to Admiral Fletcher, the first time since Dewey returned from Manila, that a seventeen-gun tribute had been fired in this harbor in honor of an officer of the United States Navy.

Astern of the Louisiana steamed the New Hampshire, which a few years ago shared with the ships of the Louisiana and Kansas classes the distinction of being among the world's greatest fighting ships. With the coming of the "all big gun" ships of the New York, Wyoming, Florida, and Delaware classes the earlier types have all been relegated to the second line of the fleet.

Had everything gone as planned, the famous old Connecticut, which was "Bob" Evans's last flagship, as Commander in Chief of the Atlantic Fleet, would have steamed astern of the New Hampshire. But this ship lost her chance to take part in the reviews on her way up from Guantanamo when one of the shafts was broken, and she had to limp into Philadelphia for repairs that will require several weeks to complete.

The Georgia a Beautiful Sight.

Trailing behind the New Hampshire was the Georgia, the first of the vessels with superimposed turrets, to appear in the Hudson. She made a particularly beautiful picture, owing to the fact that great clouds of smoked poured from her three funnels, the smoke disappearing astern in three giant black clouds. After the Georgia came her sister ship the Nebraska, whose official and enlisted personnel was saddened two weeks ago by the sudden death of her commander, Captain George W. Logan.

The Rhode Island, sister of the Georgia and Nebraska, which was expected to come in behind the Nebraska, was missing from the line-up when the fleet arrived yesterday morning, but she will be here bright and early tomorrow morning. The Rhode Island remained off the Virginia Capes, where her officers were testing a new type of navy shell.

The Virginia, another of the superimposed type, was the next ship in line, and from her masthead fluttered the two-starred pennant of Rear Admiral De Witt Coffman, the commander of the Third Division of the fleet. The Virginia's more or less notorious goat, the same that got its name in the papers by eating up the mail of Rear Admiral Seaton Schroeder when that officer commanded the fleet, was on the gun deck forward as the Virginia proceeded up the stream.

Behind the Virginia came the first of the dreadnoughts, the Utah, like the Virginia, a flagship, flying the pennant of Rear Admiral Clifford J. Boush. The Utah was one of the ships that figured in the capture of Vera Cruz last Spring. Her superiority as a fighting machine over the ships that preceded her up the river was easily apparent, her five big turrets, two forward and three aft, as compared to the two each of the other ships, indicating what a dangerous enemy she would make if ever called into action.

Entire Line of Ships in View.

The Utah anchored opposite Grant's Tomb and by this time the Louisiana and the rest of the leading ships had stopped and the rattle of their anchor chains could be plainly heard on shore. The entire column of ships was by this time in view and those astern of the Utah were moving very slowly, all of them nearing anchorages, south of 129th Street.

The Florida, a sister of the Utah, and a New York Navy Yard built ship, which was Admiral Fletcher's Vera Cruz flagship, was behind the Utah, and astern of her was the predreadnought Kansas, the only vessel not of the dreadnought type now in the Second Division. The Kansas is one of the four veterans of the famous around the world cruise in the river, the others being the Virginia, the Georgia, and the Louisiana.

The two-funnelled, four-turretted South Carolina, one of the two original vessels of the dreadnought type in the navy was 500 yards astern of the Kansas, and just behind her was her sister ship the Michigan.

The North Dakota and the Delaware, sister dreadnoughts, each displacing 20,000 tons, and each mounting ten 12-inch guns in five turrets, next appeared. These two ships are easy to distinguish, owing to the fact that their masts are placed one forward of the funnels and the other in between the funnels. On all the other ships in the river the mast arrangement is one forward and one aft of the funnels.

The great Texas was next. She came to an anchorage opposite Ninety-first Street, and right behind her was her mighty sister, the new New York, the latter flying the red two-starred pennant of Rear Admiral Mayo, the commander of the First Division. These two are the crack ships of the United States Navy now in commission, and are the first to carry guns of the 14-inch type, the projectiles of which can be hurled twenty miles, and weigh 1,400 pounds.

Admiral Mayo, whose flagship the New York is, is the officer who brought the Mexican situation to a head last year when he demanded and did not get "that famous salute" at Tampico. Admiral Mayo's flagship is in plain view of the Ansonia, where General Victoriano Huerta, who as President of Mexico refused to order the salute, now makes his New York home.

Admiral Fletcher Comes Last.

There was just one more ship and she was the last to anchor and she stopped at a point opposite Eighty-second Street. From her mast was displayed a blue pennant on which could be plainly seen from the shore the four white stars, indicating that the office whose flagship the vessel was ranked as a full Admiral. It was the fleet flagship Wyoming, the sea home of Fletcher, the Vera Cruz victor, and the Commander in Chief of the Atlantic Fleet. She anchored and the Hudson River armorclad column, with the exception of the Rhode Island, was complete. The great naval show of 1915 had begun.

On board the ships it seemed that everybody was busy. Officers scurried about giving commands, bluejackets and marines scampered about the decks. The electricians were hurrying about seeing that everything was in readiness to wire the ships for the night's illumination. Many bluejackets appeared at the gangways with suit cases. They were of the first furlough groups and some were going as far West as Chicago and Detroit to pay a hurried visit to their home folks. One young seaman who was going to a little town in Michigan to see his mother said he would only have twelve hours at home.

Before the warships had been at anchor fifteen minutes the shore boats, licensed to take visitors to and from the ships, at 25 cents each and no more each way, were running. From the first they all did a brisk business, despite the fact that it was after one o'clock before the visitors were welcomed aboard the ships. The police arrangements for handling the shore end of the visiting problem were perfect and Admiral Fletcher himself bore testimony to that fact.

Thomas Driscoll of 520 West Forty-ninth Street and Michael McGuire of 421 West Forty-fourth Street, reported at the West Forty-seventh Street Police Station last evening that George Fink of 515 West Fifty-second Street and Frank Brady of West Sixtieth Street were drowned in the Hudson shortly before noon, when a rowboat, in which all four had gone out to see the fleet, was overturned. Brady had caught a rope from a lighter in tow of a tug, said McGuire, when the sudden jerk threw them over. The Harbor Squad began a search for the bodies.

Sailor Sought by Woman, Dead.

It became known soon after the fleet anchored that the Wyoming had lost a few days ago one of her bluejackets, Seaman Frank Sell, of Allentown, Pa., who was killed in a rather peculiar way when the Wyoming was off the Virginia Capes. He was in his hammock, one end of which was made fast to a gun shutter, when the end of the hammock broke and threw the sailor against the shutter. Sell's skull was fractured and he died within a few minutes. His body is in the hospital Solace and will be sent to Allentown this week. Among the visitors to the Wyoming yesterday was a young woman who asked for Sells. When told he was dead she was deeply affected, but left without giving her name.

On all the ships yesterday the chief topic of conversation was the sinking of the Lusitania. Navy men, under the neutrality regulations are not supposed to talk about the war for publication, but it is not violating any confidence when it is stated that had the Kaiser visited the fleet yesterday he would not have been embarrassed so far as the overhearing of complimentary remarks is concerned.

The Auxiliary Division of the fleet will arrive in the Hudson this morning. This division comprises the repair ship Vestal, the mine-layer San Francisco, the supply ship Celtic, the fuel ships Cyclops, Neptune, Orion, and Jupiter, the hospital ship Solace, and the naval tugs Ontario, Patapsco, Sonoma, and Patuxent.

The destroyer flotilla will arrive on Wednesday, and with its arrival the fleet, as it will be reviewed by President Wilson, will be complete.

The Board of Managers of the Sons of the Revolution will give a breakfast in honor of Admiral Fletcher and his officers at Fraunces Tavern Tuesday at 12:30 P. M. The breakfast will be attended by about one hundred persons, including officers of the fleet, members of the Board of Managers, and distinguished guests. The committee in charge consists of Philip Rhinelander, Chairman; James M. Beck, Clarence W. Bowen, Lawrence L. Gillespie, T. J. Oakley Rhinelander, and Robert Olyphant, President of the society.

Next Saturday the officers of the fleet will be entertained at luncheon at the Whitehall Club by the members of the Circumnavigators' Club.

McANENY WELCOMES FLEET.

Boards Wyoming as She Arrives and Is Later Visited by the Admiral.

When the flagship Wyoming dropped anchor off Eighty-second Street yesterday morning, the police boat Patrol, with Acting Mayor George McAneny, Dock Commissioner R. A. C. Smith, and Theodore Rousseau, the Mayor's secretary, on board, steamed alongside. The city's officials were received by Captain H. McL. P. Huse, Admiral Fletcher's Chief of Staff, the ship trumpeters sounding a salute as they ascended the gangplank.

Captain Huse escorted the welcoming party to Admiral Fletcher's cabin, where they were presented to the Commander in Chief and the other members of the fleet staff. Mr. McAneny told the Admiral how glad he and all New Yorkers were that the fleet was here.

Mr. McAneny's visit was brief and after a hurried inspection of the big superdreadnought and presentation to the ship's officers he boarded the Patrol and returned to the City Hall, where at 2:30 o'clock in the afternoon Admiral Fletcher returned his call.

Landing at the foot of West Twenty-fourth Street, the Admiral and his staff proceeded downtown under the escort of the mounted police. When they reached City Hall Park they found the plaza in front of the City Hall surrounded by a crowd assembled to see the finish of The Evening Mail marathon. A way was made for them by the police, and as the escort saluted they proceeded into the City Hall.

Acting Mayor McAneny and the members of the Board of Estimate were awaiting them in the Mayor's reception room. The proceedings were very brief. After the Acting Mayor had shaken hands with the Admiral and had the staff presented to him, he made the formal speech of welcome, in which he said:

Admiral Fletcher, I feel greatly honored, sir, in receiving you, your fleet, and your officers on behalf of the City of New York. I have had the pleasure of calling upon you on your entrance to our port this morning. I have witnessed one of the most magnificent spectacles ever seen in our waters and enjoyed your personal courtesy. May I again assure you that the whole city joins in extending this welcome? You have chosen our part for the review of the fleet by the President and for a week's stay with us. The city is tense in its expectancy, and I may assure you that while you are here the spirit of welcome will constantly go out to you. The great pride that we naturally feel in the navy will be intensified by this demonstration of its power; and added to it will, I am sure, be an even greater appreciation of that national security for which it stands. You will be entertained not only by the city government, but by these gentlemen, members of a committee appointed by Mayor Mitchel, in whose absence I am receiving you. You have been acquainted with our plans. I need only add that the city government joins in this welcome, not only with enthusiasm, but with real satisfaction.

To this the Admiral replied by saying:

Mr. Mayor and Gentlemen: I thank you very much for myself and on behalf of the officers and men of the fleet for the great honor and all the courtesies that you are extending to us, and I accept these as an appreciation of the interest that the people are taking in the American Navy, and of their realization that the defense of our country lies first upon the water rather than upon land, and I think the people of this country are beginning to realize that situation, and I want to thank you for all the courtesies on behalf of the officers and men of the fleet.

The Admiral and his staff were then presented to the members of the Board of Estimate, and after chatting for a few minutes took their leave, returning to the landing place escorted as before.

CROWDS SEE FLEET ARRIVE.

They Throng Riverside Drive to See the Great Battleship Array.

Riverside Drive was crowded yesterday morning an hour before the battleship Louisiana hove into view in the van of the column of incoming battleships. From Seventy-ninth Street, just north of which the flagship Wyoming was to anchor, up to 135th Street, off which the little submarines are nestling close to their mother ships, men, women, and children were everywhere, and the eyes of all were turned downstream, watching for the fleet.

Just before 10 o'clock the Louisiana was seen far downstream, and behind her, as far as the eye could reach, ribbons of smoke indicated the positions of the other battleships. In a few minutes the entire fleet was in view in this order: Louisiana, New Hampshire, Georgia, Nebraska, Virginia, Utah, Florida, Kansas, South Carolina, Michigan, North Dakota, Delaware, Texas, New York, and Wyoming.

It was an inspiring spectacle, and from Riverside Drive everybody had a splendid view. It was not a demonstrative crowd, but it was evidently deeply impressed, and not a few of the spectators were thinking of the terrible struggle in Europe and the torpedoing of the Lusitania, and what an array of fighting ships really means.

By 11 o'clock all the ships were swinging at anchor, the column stretching from Eighty-second Street in a straight line north to Fort Washington Point. It is impossible to see the whole of such a line as this at the same time, but from any point along Riverside Drive at least half of the ships are always in view. A stream of automobiles and sight-seeing touring cars continually passed up and down the Drive as the ships were straining at their anchorages, and the vicinity of Seventy-ninth Street was the favorite place for those afoot to gather.

During the afternoon the crowds kept increasing and hundreds went out in boats to the fleet until 6 o'clock, when the ships were cleared of visitors. The police estimated that more than 100,000 people were on Riverside Drive, south of Grant's Tomb, and perhaps half as many more even north of that point. All classes of people were represented from the foreigner, who cannot yet talk English, to the died-in-the-wool American, who is proud of the fleet and all it stands for.

Flag venders, peanut peddlers, souvenir men, circulated among the crowds, and the flag men in particular did a rushing business. The most popular of their wares was a gold and blue pennant with the letters "U. S. A." and a picture of a dreadnaught upon it.

FIRED STORED DYNAMITE.

Two Schoolboys Blown to Death While Shooting at a Mark.

WATERTOWN, N. Y., May 8.—Earl Riordan, 17 years old, and Altmont Connelly, high school students, were instantly killed this afternoon when a barn, containing about four tons of dynamite, belonging to a local hardware dealer, located on the outskirts of the city, exploded. The bodies of the two young men were found 300 feet away.

A shattered rifle near Riordan's body leads to the supposition that he had been shooting at the building without being aware of its contents. Thousands of windows in the entire city were shattered by the explosion, which shook the town like an earthquake.

CATHOLIC ALUMNAE PLANS.

The New York Chapter of the International Federation of Catholic Alumnae announces that its public meeting, planned originally for mid-May, is postponed until October. FOUND DYING ON CAR TRACK.

Foul Play May Have Caused Death of Standard Oil Employe.

Special to The New York Times.

PASSAIC, N. J., May 8.—Michael Shanahan of 12 McLean Street was found about midnight last night on the Newark-Paterson trolley line at Delawanna. It is uncertain whether he was struck by an automobile or trolley car or met with foul play.

The man was seen by Motorman Brooks of a Newark-bound car lying face downward on the track. He applied the air brakes, but the car struck Shanahan and carried him some distance on the fender. He still showed some signs of life and was rushed in an automobile to St. Mary's Hospital, where he died.

Shanahan had been employed at Elizabeth by the Standard Oil Company for some time, and had been in the habit of reaching his home in this city at 7 o'clock. His brother James said today he had never known him to stop at Delawanna.

This new Phonograph will play for you, like other phonographs or you may play it yourself by means of its wonderful patented tone-control. In either case the richness, the fullness, the sheer beauty of its tone, will amaze and delight you.

The Aeolian-Vocalion

The New Phonograph Made by The Aeolian Company

When You Play It

When you play the Aeolian-Vocalion by means of its wonderful new feature—The Graduola—you do not change the artist's interpretation. That remains always, in spirit, the same.

His phrasing, his tempo, are part of the Record. These you neither can, nor indeed do you desire, to alter.

But this you can do. You can give to the music new beauty and a new quality of liveingness. You can vary it in subtle details, just as the Artist himself varies his every performance.

You can shade and color the tones, now rendering this soft passage still softer. Again giving to these brave phrases still greater power and dominance.

Think what this means! Mastery of the Phonograph means mastery of all instruments and voices.

Do you love the violin? Then play violin Records, expressing your own musical instincts with the bows of the world's most famous masters. Do you wish to sing? The sweetest, best-trained voices in the world are yours.

Words cannot picture the charm and interest of the Aeolian-Vocalion with its marvelous new tone-control. You must hear it and play it yourself. Then you will comprehend why it has leapt into instant and amazing popularity.

When It Plays for You

When you let The Aeolian-Vocalion play for you—for like other Phonographs it will play itself—you are astonished at what sound like new tones and effects.

The music is richer and deeper and fuller than any you have heard before from a Phonograph. Nor do you hear any of those noises that have seemed to be inseparable from phonographic reproduction.

Every instrumental Record that it plays reflects its own distinctive tone-quality. The violin is truly a violin, with all the wistful, string beauty of that instrument. Clarionets, flutes, horns, all identify themselves the moment they are heard. While vocal Records sound like the veritable living tones of human beings, not like strident reproductions.

If you use The Aeolian-Vocalion for dancing, another phase of its superiority to other Phonographs becomes apparent. Its fullness and body of tone give it greater carrying power than other Phonographs possess. Without loudness or harshness, its musical strains pervade a greater area, reaching the ears of even those relatively distant from it.

The Aeolian-Vocalion is made in a large variety of beautiful models. Its prices compare favorably with those of Phonographs of other make. One favorite style, costing $90, may be purchased for $8 down and $5 per month. All the different models are sold on equally moderate terms. Liberal allowances are made on Talking Machines of other make, taken in exchange.

Hot weather is here.

You hate to pump up your tires by hand-pump even worse now in hot or rainy weather than in the cold weather.

So why perspire?

Why puff and blow and dirty up your clothes and be a "joke" on any highway doing the hard, back-aching work of hand-pumping flat tires?

Why not let your motor quickly do this most annoying job connected with automobiling—in the garage and on the road?

Then, if the Stewart Tire Pump doesn't prove itself to be the most satisfactory and comfortable necessity you have on your car, in saving work and time, as well as in keeping your tires properly inflated, and if you don't say yourself that the $15 price is the wisest expenditure you ever made for such a boon, all you need to do is to tell us so and you get your money back.

30 Days' Trial Offer—Your money back if not satisfied

The Stewart Tire Pump is of highest grade construction, beautiful, light in weight, can't strain your motor, oils itself. Can't overheat and force vaporised oil into your tires to rot them, and is "always on the job" with 100% efficiency and reliability.

Tire companies report that 90% of all tire troubles are due to tires not being pumped up sufficiently, which you won't do with a hand-pump. It's too back-breaking.

The Stewart will save its price in the additional mileage you'll get from tires properly inflated, which also makes riding and steering easier and consequently safer.

SOUTHPAW'S ADVENT INTO THE GIANTS

James Mutrie was the manager of the New York Giants away back when the game was young and New York was initiated into the National League with "Gentle Jeems" as its first big league manager. Mutrie had succeeded in landing two excellent right-handed pitchers in Tim Keefe and Micky Welch and cast his eagle eye about for a southpaw, and this was in 1885-86. The astute "Jeems" had lines out for several youngsters who threw a baseball from the larboard side. However, he selected one, a youthful Irishman, who had set the Eastern League all aglow with his wonderful hurling for Jersey City during the season of 1885. Michael Tiernan was his name and Mike was strictly left-handed in every respect, and the first southpaw pitcher to sign a New York National League contract.

The game did not have over a dozen good left-handed pitchers at that time and only seven were holding jobs in the major leagues. But managers began to appreciate the value of a clever left-hander on their line-up and Mutrie and several other big league leaders were scouring the country for this rare species of twirler. Mike Tiernan did not succeed as a pitcher; in fact, he did not pitch an inning of big league ball. His arm went back on him, which proved a blessing in disguise to both Mike and the Giants, for Tiernan developed into one of the greatest batsmen the game ever had, and possibly won more games for New York with his trusty bat than he would have won with a strong pitching arm.

During the season of 1886 Mutrie tried a couple of chaps who threw a baseball from the off-side by the name of Keach and Devlin. All that they had to recommend them was the fact that they were left-handed. In the season of 1887 Mutrie discovered a couple of budding left-handers who looked good from all angles. Billy George, a youngster with a delivery so wild that no batsmen could land on it, and no catcher could reach his wild flings, held on for a full season, but did not pitch in many games. A southpaw pitcher named Ledell Titcomb was the first one of that type to give the Giants and Mutrie any hope that they had at last found a pitcher of the left-handed variety who had ability and steadiness to fill the bill. Titcomb did remarkable pitching during the season of 1888, in fact, it was sensational.

Manager Mutrie tried for three seasons to develop these two left-handers into reliable workers, but George could not overcome his tendency to throw the ball over the backstop and Titcomb was too much of a comedian to take baseball seriously, but the fellow had rare skill and was a puzzle to all big league batsmen when he felt inclined to do his best. In the season of 1890 Mutrie signed the noted Jesse Burkett as a left-handed pitcher. Jess was left-handed, all right, as his record proved. In one game he struck out fourteen batsmen and then issued fourteen free passes to first. Burkett, like Tiernan, discovered while with New York that he was cut out for a swatsman instead of a boxman.

Mutrie failed to develop a good left-hander during the nine seasons he led the Giants. From 1891 until 1896 the New York management did not have a southpaw in sight—in fact, there was not enough left-handed hurlers in the league to go around. In no year from 1891 until 1896 did the league have more than nine southpaw pitchers, and it was then a twelve-club circuit. In the season of 1896 the New York management trapped two wild southpaws in "Cy" Seymour and George Doheny. In the try-out it was a swell race between these two for honors in the wild man's class, but "Cy" outdistanced Doheny in the finals. In the first game Seymour appeared in the box score accounted "Cy" as doing very well outside of walking seven batsmen, making two wild heaves, and hitting one in the five innings he worked.

Seymour and Doheny were the only left-handers of class on a New York line-up since its advent into the big league until George Wiltse made his debut as a Giant hurler. In the season of 1904 Wiltse began his remarkable career as a pitcher for New York. Without doubt, Wiltse was the most valuable left-hander that ever wore a Giant uniform. In the dozen seasons he pitched for them his average of games won totaled .620. He had remarkable control of the ball, issuing less than two passes per game and was as steady as the proverbial "Dutch" clock in other respects.

George Wiltse, while not a sensational pitcher, was the creator of many sensational pitching feats. His performance on July 4, 1908, in holding the Philadelphia team hitless in a ten inning game stands out as one of the most brilliant pitching feats in the annals of base ball. Wiltse has been twelve seasons service on the New York team and holds the record for all time for consecutive years service on one team among the southpaw contingent of base ball.

Wiltse practically had no trouble to hold the position of star southpaw pitcher of the Giants until the advent of Richard Marquard, which took place during the season of 1909. Mr. Marquard pitched such wonderful ball for the Indianapolis Club during the season of 1908 that it cost the New York management $11,000 to have him affix his name to a contract. Marquard failed to displace Wiltse as the star left-hander in spite of his great record and the enormous bonus paid for him. During 1909 "Hooks" Wiltse had the best or, rather, one of his best years while Marquard was considered a failure.

REAL TEST FOR PITCHERS.

Inventor Has "Automatic Umpire," Which Registers Strikes.

Umpire baiting as a sport gets its quietus in a little machine now being demonstrated at the Grand Central Palace by its inventor, H. E. Westgate, a Los Angeles newspaper writer and a baseball "fan" of the superlative degree. He has assumed pitching to be a science as well as a sport, and has a theory that every baseball pitcher can be trained to cut the corners of the home plate. Westgate having figured out that the average ball player is 5 feet 10 inches in height, and that the distance between his knee and his shoulder is 40 inches has assumed that all the successful batting done in a ball game is within a "strike zone" of 17 inches in width—the width of the home plate—and 40 inches in height.

So he has constructed an automatic umpire by means of which a pitcher can tell whether the ball he throws is a strike or a ball, as prescribed by the rules of the national game. On a board he has painted figures of the average batsman and a catcher in position to receive the ball. In its proper place is a reproduction of a home plate. Any ball thrown at the catcher which goes within the strike zone, and which would be a legal strike under the rules, hits a board so balanced that it will ring a bell, thus registering a strike. If the thrown ball strikes this board on which the catcher is painted so that one-half the sphere is inside the strike zone, there will be a strike registered by the automatic bell. But if two-thirds of the ball is outside that zone no strike is registered, the assumption being that a ball that is two-thirds of its diameter outside the points of the home plate is not a fair ball within the meaning of the rules.

Ball players are getting a lot of fun out of the machine, and some of them are having the conceit taken out of them when they try their hands at placing the ball over the plate. Its adaptability to practical tarining purposes remains to be shown. As a toy for the baseball player to fol with and possibly help his delivery, it is a source of joy, a means of checking exuberance of boasters, and at the least is a new indoor game that seems to promise good sport as well as practical training.

TREMAINE WINS AT TENNIS.

Kingsley Schoolboy Captures Columbia Interscholastic Tournament.

H. C. Tremaine of Kingsley School won the annual interscholastic tennis tournament held at Columbia University yesterday, earning the right to compete in the national scholastics, to be held in June at Forest Hills. Tremaine faced A. W. Shaw of Bayonne High School in the final round and defeated him in straight sets, 6—4, 6—3. Some pretty tennis was displayed by both men, but Tremaine was the master at all stages. Both men had met hard opponents in the early rounds and as the pace had been a hard one, it was agreed that two best out of three rather than three out of five should determine the winner.

Tremaine played 112 games during the course of the afternoon's tournament. A. W. Shaw, runner-up to Tremaine, was runner up last year also, losing only to H. Beekman of Pawling School, generally credited as the schoolboy wonder.

Eighteen players were entered, the pick of the high and prep schools of New York and vicinity. R. B. Haines of Horace Mann, played good tennis, defeating all opponents until the semi-final, where he was defeated by A. W. Shaw after three hard sets, 6—3, 4—6, 6—4.

Stuyvesant Wins at Nets.

Stuyvesant, last year's high school champion, defeated De Witt Clinton at tennis yesterday on the Riverside Courts, Ninetieth Street and Fifth Avenue, by 3 matches to 2. Clinton won two singles matches and Stuyvesant one singles and one doubles. The latter match was long drawn out, Gillespie and Jacobi defeating Rosenberg and Letson, 7—5, 12—10. The summary:

Singles—Blumenthal, Stuyvesant, defeated Webster, De Witt Clinton, 6—4, 3—6, 6—2; Fleishman, De Witt Clinton, defeated Green, Stuyvesant, 6—2, 6—2; Sorrin, De Witt Clinton, defeated Barrett, Stuyvesant, 6—2, 6—2.

Doubles—Gillespie and Jacobi, Stuyvesant, defeated Rosenberg and Letson, 7—5, 12—10.

N. Y. U. Defeats Syracuse at Nets.

The New York University tennis players, who have so far remained unbeaten this season, defeated Syracuse yesterday on the courts at University Heights by the score of 5 to 0. The up-State team did not win a single one of the matches, only one set in one of the doubles going to their credit. Captain E. J. Fixman, Roswell C. Peardon, and Chester Brown played star games for the Violet. Brown, a freshman, showed the best work of the day when he wore down a lead of five games to one which H. F. Candee of Syracuse held against him, and emerged the victor by 8 games to 6. Brown and Fixman had an easy time in their doubles, defeating their opponents 6—3 and 6—1. The Violet team made use of their new courts for the first time in yesterday's match.

CHANCE'S ADVICE TO THIRD BASEMEN

Peerless Leader Says Strong, Talented Fingers Are the First Requirement.

By FRANK L. CHANCE.

A tip-top third baseman ought to have hands as deft as those of a society belle and as strong as the maulers on a village blacksmith. (Please don't laugh.) That looks like a pretty big order to fill, but when you have managed a big league club with a payroll full of "stars"—they are at least "stars" from a salary standpoint—you are used to giving big orders, seemingly impossible orders, with the hope they will be filled at least in part.

Boiling down, the gist of that statement of mine simply means that a cracking good third baseman—one who stands at the top of the list in the majors—has to possess the best pair of hands of any man on the team.

He has to possess a pair of digits which can stop balls which are driven at him with lightning speed and he has to be able to knock down balls which are driven to one side of him and at the same time receive the sphere and get it over to first in time to beat some ten-second man who is legging it for the bag.

Right now, before I go any further with this talk to future "greats," I want to give you young third basemen a pointer which will save your team many games and cut off many a run at the plate. When there is a man on second and the batter makes a safe hit, dash to your corner station and plant yourself on the inside of the bag. Be careful and do not stand on the base line.

When you have anchored yourself in that position you will find the runner will have to get back of you to reach the bag and that he will also have to make his turn for the home plate after he has crossed third base, and in doing so will lose at least fifteen feet. If you allow him to cut inside the bag he can make a sweeping run in rounding third.

A man on third must use great judgment in playing close in or deep for hitters. Of course, he plays in several feet closer for a left-handed hitter than for a right-handed one. He must be set so he can "get the jump" on the ball.

Big league managers generally judge whether a third baseman is good or not by the position he takes on the field. If he plays away back and is able to come in and cover a lot of ground on slow hit balls, there is little doubt in the manager's mind as to the ability of the player. The further back he can play the better third baseman he is.

A third baseman must have good use of his left hand. He plays close to the line, rarely going very far to his right for ground balls, but instead making his long jumps for the balls which are hit to his left. He has to be able to stick his gloved hand in front of the ball, stop it, recover it with his right hand, and get it over to the waiting first baseman in time to get the runner.

If there is a runner on second and the batter attempts to sacrifice him to third, the third baseman should leave the bunt alone and let the pitcher handle it. The pitcher should come over, get the bunt and shoot the ball to third.

One of the great faults of many infielders—a fault, I should say, possessed by three out of five of them—is that they do not get the ball away from them quick enough. Never take any more time than necessary in making a throw to first, or any other station on the infield, for that matter. Get the ball out of your hands and into some one else's as soon as you can.

I am going to cut this talk a little short so I can answer some of the queries young players have been asking me. A boy asks me what is good for a bruised hand.

Soak your hand in water as hot as you can bear it. Then paint the bruised portion with iodine. Rest your hand as much as possible and wear more padding in your glove. I judge the bruise is on the gloved hand, as there is where I used to get them. If your hand has been sore continuously for two or three years you may have to have an X-ray examination made of it if it does not yield to the treatment I have suggested.

Francis P. Hobart writes me that he won thirty-three out of thirty-four games last season as a pitcher, and that he is a good outfielder. He says he is 19 years old, 5 feet 7, and weighs 155 pounds. He wants advice about getting into professional ball.

My advice to young Hobart is to ask for a try-out with the best semi-professional team in a near-by city. If he makes good in that company he can then ask for a try-out with some minor-league team in some near-by State. The scouts will find him if he is good. He also wants to know if he is too small for a ball player. The answer to that is to glance at "Rabbit" Maranville, Evers, Tinker, Maisel, and a host of other players who are not big men but who are at the top of their class when it comes to playing ball.

LAWRENCEVILLE FIRST.

Takes Interscholastic Meet by Winning First Place in Six Events.

Special to The New York Times.

LAWRENCEVILLE, N. J., May 8.—Lawrenceville School won the interscholastic track meet here today, with a total of 61½ points. Peddie Institute was second with 33 points, Pennington School third with 14 points, and Penn Charter School fourth with 12½ points. Trenton High School was fifth with 10 points.

Of the eleven events, Lawrenceville captured first place in six. Erdman was strong in the hurdles, winning both the 120-yard and 220-yard events. Funk was first in the shot put and second in the hammer throw. Walker won the pole vault, while the high jump was won by Quinn. McCaffey won the hammer throw.

The 100-yard dash was won by Greiner of Peddie in 0:10. The mile run was won by Barrick of Trenton High School in 4:45 3-5. Meredith of Peddie Institute proved the star sprinter of the meet and won the 440-yard event. Knipe of Pennington was the winner of the 220-yard dash in 0:22. Quinn's performance, which won the high jump, was 5 feet 6½ inches. The running broad jump was won by Marsh of Peddie, with 20 feet 2 inches.

Buddy Ryan Beats Eddie Kelly.

Buddy Ryan, the west side lightweight, scored a popular victory over Eddie Kelly of Harlem in the main bout of ten rounds at the Sharkey Athletic Club last night. Kelly incurred the displeasure of the spectators by using his elbows in the clinches, but he inflicted no damage by this proceedure. Each man weighed 135 pounds. The first three rounds, which were decidedly fast, went in Ryan's favor, while in the next three the advantage lay with the Harlem boxer. The seventh and eighth were also hard fought, with neither man having much the better of the tilt. Ryan came to the front again in the ninth, and in the tenth did more than hold his own, gaining the honors of the match. Richie Ryan and Billy Bennett were scheduled to box ten rounds, but the bout was cancelled.

Lee to Lead Columbia Swimmers.

John Charles Lee, a senior, was elected Captain of the Columbia swimming team for next year, at a meeting of the squad yesterday. The past season was Lee's first year at the sport, but he proved one of the mainstays of the Blue and White combination, scoring more points than any man on the team, with the exception of Hal Vollmer, the freshman swimmer. Louis Mouquin was re-elected Captain of the water polo team for next season. Mouquin is a senior and a veteran of three years on the team.

Union a Three-Time Winner.

Special to The New York Times.

SCHENECTADY, May 8.—Union College was victorious in three athletic contests held here this afternoon, defeating Hamilton in baseball by a score of 4 to 3, Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute by a score of 86½ to 36½ in a track meet, and Stevens in tennis by 4 matches to 2. The Hamilton game was one of the most thrilling ever seen on the campus. It was not until the tenth inning that Union managed to score the winning run.

COLUMBIA DEFEATS FORDHAM BY 6 TO 2

Smith's Curves Too Puzzling for the Maroon Batters, Except in Fourth.

Columbia trounced Fordham in an exciting baseball game on South Field yesterday by the score of 6 to 2. The Blue and White literally batted their way to a victory, banging out twelve hits, including two home runs, a triple, and a double, all of which figured in the run getting. Every man on the Morningside team got one or more hits, well scattered through the game, runs being scored in five different innings.

George Smith, Columbia's star twirler, was on the mound for the entire nine innings, and pitched masterly ball, with the exception of one bad inning, the fourth, in which the heavy Maroon batters obtained their two tallies. The big Blue and White boxman held his adversaries to seven hits, all of them singles, and in addition retired ten men on strikes.

The batting honors of the day fell to Friedrich, Blue and White shortstop, and Smith. The ex-Columbian batted safely three times in as many appearances at bat, while Smith contributed a home run and a double. The pitcher's circuit smash came in the home team's half of the fourth with the score tied and a man on base, and put Columbia in a lead that was never threatened.

Fordham's one big inning was in the fourth frame. Smith weakened to start the round and passed Kiernan. Carroll followed with an infield hit, and after Conway had filed out to Benson in centre field, Kane walked, filling the bases. An infield hit by Viviano scored Kiernan and Carroll and Maroon hopes ran high. Kelliher was hit by a pitched ball and the bases were filled again. Here Smith recovered himself and struck out both Berrigan and his pitching rival Walsh, ending the inning and the rally. After that, Pound Smith held the visitors well in check.

The victory gives Columbia the championship of New York City, the Blue and White having previously humbled in succession New York University, Manhattan College, College of the City of New York, and St. John's College of Brooklyn.

Columbia began scoring in the very first inning, Friedrich driving Watt home with a triple after the lead-off man had gotten on by an infield hit. Beck's home run in the third gave the home team another tally and Smith's four-bagger in the fourth with Lane on base, accounted for two runs. Another run was pushed across the plate in the fifth. Beck walked, was sacrificed to second by Friedrich, advanced to third on Buncke's out, and scored on Page's single. The sixth and last run came in the seventh when three hits produced but one tally. Benson singled to start, was sacrificed to second and scored on successive singles by Friedrich and Buncke, leaving Friedrich on third and Buncke on first. Buncke stole, but Page was out, hit by his own batted ball, and Shea ended the round by tapping weakly to Walsh, being thrown out by the pitcher at first. The score:

NEWARK HIGH'S TROPHY.

Win Princeton Club's Annual New Jersey Interscholastic Meet.

The Central High School of Newark won the point trophy at the annual track and field meet of the Princeton Club of Newark held yesterday afternoon at the Newark Academy Field, Orange and First Streets, Newark. Eighteen New Jersey high and prep school track teams competed, but the Central lads got an early lead and were never headed.

Two meet records were made, one in the pole vault and the other in the one-mile relay race. Ralph Runyon of the Plainfield High School vaulted 10 feet 11¾ inches, which replaced the old mark of 10 feet 10¾ inches, made in 1910. The Bloomfield High School relay team won in 3:42 3-5, which also bettered the 1910 mark of 3:45¾, created by the Barringer High School runners in that year. Runyon was the individual star of the meet, for his work in the vault, the running high and broad jumps gave his school the only points scored by it, 14 in all. Runyon won the vault and high jump and was tied for first in the broad jump, dividing the points.

Central scored 38 points, and its closest competitors finished as follows in the point toal: East Orange High, 22; Bloomfield High, 15½; Plainfield High, 14; Newark Academy, 10½; South Side High, 11½; Barringer High, 8½; Montclair High, 6.

YALE'S INCENTIVE TO WIN.

Another Track Victory Over Harvard Will Give Elis Cup.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., May 8.—Yale's track team will make one of the hardest fights on record next Saturday to win the annual dual games with Harvard. Victory for the Elis means permanent possession of the cup, which must be won five times to guarantee its possession. Since the cup was offered Yale has scored four victories and Harvard only two. The fact that the cup will be fought on Yale's soil makes Yale especially eager to clinch possession of the cup, as Harvard will reign favorite in next year's meet, which will be held in Cambridge.

The cup, which Yale expects to win by a margin of only 5 or 6 points, is the third offered by alumni of the two universities. The first was put up in 1891 and was won by Harvard seven years later. Another was immediately offered, and was won by Yale. Yale has won twelve annual meets to Harvard's eleven. Harvard won the first three meets and Yale captured the last three. The closest meet was the last which Harvard won, the score being 52½ points to 51½ in 1910. The four alumni who have been at the head of the cup donations in track athletics have been Walter Camp and Harry Brooks of Yale, Evert J. Wendell and George B. Morrison of Harvard.

Harvard has three trump cards in the distance events. Johnstone has consistently jumped close to 23 feet in the broad jump, and is conceded first place. Camp, in the pole vault, is one of the most consistent campaigners in the country, and his record of tying for first place in the intercollegiates last year sets him down as favorite for the event in the meet next week. He is good for 12 feet 3 inches, while Heyl and Nick Carter of Yale are only consistent 12-foot men.

Minor points will decide the meet. Yale expects to score second and third places in the dashes with the veteran Tommy Cornell and with Charlie Stewart, a Southener, who was ineligible for the freshman team last year. Bingham and Willcox of Harvard are expected to push Wilkie to his limit in the quarter-mile, and Kent of Harvard to gobble second place in the mile.

The home track should count several points for Yale, and will probably decide the meet. A Yale forecast, claiming the meet by 6 points, a total score of 55 to 49, follows:

	Yale.	Harvard.
100-yard dash	3	5
220-yard dash	3	5
440-yard dash	5	3
880-yard run	3	5
One-mile run	6	2
Two-mile run	5	3
120-yard hurdles	5	3
220-yard hurdles	3	5
High jump	5	3
Broad jump	3	5
Shot-put	4	4
Pole vault	3	5

AMATEUR CYCLING BOOM.

Keen Competition Anticipated for Championship Honors.

Amateur cycling has increased to such an extent in the past few years that the season at hand will see a larger number of simon-pures battling for honors on the Sheepshead Bay and Newark tracks than ever before in the history of the game. An indication of the added interest among the amateurs was shown last Sunday at Newark, when sixty-four riders went to the post in the open-heat race, the class of riders and the good time made being an assurance that the competition for the title this year will be a close one.

An entirely new field will be seen this year in the dash for the championship, twelve of the leading riders last year turning professional, which leaves the struggle for first honors an open matter. Donald McDougall and Harry Kaiser have managed to uphold the East in annexing the title the past few years, Kaiser being the winner last year, but the influx of riders from the different parts of the country, as far West as San Francisco, means that the Eastern contingent will not walk away with the coveted prize without competition.

The star of the Western aggregation is L. H. Drury of San Francisco, who will be the favorite with the local bike fans on account of his keen speed and courage that he is noted for. The New York A. C. will be represented by a crack collection, the strongest pair to sport the club's colors being Frank Whitney and Eddie Kane. Alfred Lake will be another member in the race who is possessed of excellent qualities as a rider. The veteran, Adam Byerman, dean of the amateurs, is again in trim and is sure to be battling it out with the leaders.

Tim Sullivan of New Haven and John Dreher of Newark are two riders picked to be in the money in the final dash. Others who will be heard from are Tom Flannigan of Jersey City, Walter White of Newark, Chester Smith of Long Island City, Anthony Dasimone of the Century Road Club, and Thomas Grim of Irvington. Flannigan won the half-mile sprint at Newark last Summer from a field of fifty.

The Sheepshead Bay Velodrome will be ready for practice spins a week before the opening, May 22, giving the riders a chance to perfect their condition and be ready for the important events on the program. All of the crack amateurs will ride in the various events.

CLABBY AND CHIP AT RINK.

Middleweights to Clash Next Wednesday Night.

The Jimmy Clabby-George Chip match, at the St. Nicholas A. C. Wednesday night, tops the list of pugilistic attractions for the week at local clubs. These middleweight rivals are possessed of championship ability, Chip having held the title before he carelessly tossed it away in a bout with Al McCoy. Since that time Chip easily put McCoy out in a ten-round bout, giving him a more severe lacing than Clabby did last week. McCoy can hardly be considered as the legitimate holder of the title, and it is up to Chip and Clabby to fight it out for a match with Gibbons over the twenty-round route. The latter has already accepted terms to meet the winner.

A Model Bill for All Legislatures in the United States

Suggested as a Means of Preventing Foolish Merchants Adding to Their Overhead Expenses.

A Bill to Prevent Merchants Adding to Overhead Charges and to Provide for Its Enforcement.

Be it enacted by the people of the State of ——, represented in the General Assembly:

Sec. 1.—That it shall be unlawful for any retail dealer in merchandise, which is to be offered for sale for profit, to offer for such sale any goods, wares, or merchandise, to any buyer whatsoever at a lower price than a scheduled price hereinafter provided for, unless he shall have obtained permission so to do, prior to making such offering, from a commission, as hereinafter provided.

Sec. 2.—That it shall be unlawful for any such dealer to advertise any sale of any merchandise, goods, or wares, of any sort or description, in any newspaper, periodical, or other paper or magazine of general circulation, or to advertise such sale on any bill board, poster, sign, or in any place where it may be read by any person whatsoever in any language ancient or modern. In construing this section it shall be taken to prohibit the use of any form of advertising or notice to the public whatsoever, which shall in any way add to the merchant's cost of doing business, and which does not at the same time add to the value of the goods, wares, or merchandise so to be advertised.

Sec. 3.—That it shall be unlawful for any merchant, who in his relations to the public offers or expects to offer for sale any goods, wares, or merchandise, of whatever sort, kind or description, to maintain at his expense any reading room, rest room, writing room, or any other room which is designed for the convenience of his customers, either on the premises or off of the same, or to maintain or permit to be maintained any telephone booths, letter boxes, sub-postal stations, or to maintain or permit to be maintained any orchestra, or any other organization which is designed to furnish amusement for the said customer, or to maintain any system of free delivery of goods to said customer. It being the sense of this section that any sort of convenience for the benefit of the said customer adds to the cost of doing business and is therefore contrary to public policy, and calculated to stir up competition among the various merchants.

Sec. 4.—That it shall be unlawful for any merchant, who offers or expects to offer goods, wares, or merchandise for sale to the general public, to employ more than Any information to said customer which can be construed in any way as intending to convey to said customer any service for which the said customer is not charged a fixed price, over and above the actual price to said customer of the goods, wares, and merchandise, shall be regarded as a violation of this act.

Sec. 5.—The governor shall appoint a commission to be composed of five members, whose duty it shall be to see that the provisions of this act are complied with. Said commission shall be appointed by the governor, only on the previous recommendation of the various retail dry goods associations of the United States, acting in conjunction with those department stores which shall have first qualified for the making of such recommendation, by having satisfied the aforesaid retail dry goods associations that they are willing to permit the aforesaid dry goods associations to do all the necessary thinking and planning for them.

The said commission shall have the right to summon any merchant to appear before it at any time that it shall see fit, to inquire into any action of said merchant, for the purpose of determining whether or not the said merchant has violated, or is about to violate, or ever has contemplated the violation of any of the provisions of this act, whether herein specifically set forth or which may be made by construction to be intended as a part of this act, but which through oversight or inadvertence the legislature of this state has omitted from the actual phrasing of this act. The commission shall also have the right to fix the price at which any merchant shall offer his goods for sale. WEEK OF SUCCESSES FOR GERMAN ARMS ON EASTERN AND WESTERN BATTLE FRONTS

Defeat in Galicia May Cause Collapse of Carpathian Campaign.

HEAVY BLOW TO RUSSIA

Possibility That British Line May Have to be Straightened by Retirement to New Positions.

DANGER IN PRESENT STATE

BY A MILITARY EXPERT.

Before a thorough appreciation can be had of the possible moral and physical disaster that threatens the Russian arms as a result of the reported Austro-German success in Galicia, it is necessary to go back to the beginning of the Russian Carpathian movement and review briefly what the probable Russian plan was and the reasons why it was adopted.

When Przemysl capitulated Russia had to decide for her next move between two objectives, Cracow and the plains of Hungary. These were the only two logical movements of which the situation was capable. An operation against Cracow could be directed either from the west, using Przemysl as a base, or from the south, the latter involving first a method of holding in check the Austrian army which at that time occupied the northern slopes of the Carpathians.

Operations against either of these objectives, however, contained elements of unavoidable danger. A movement against Cracow, whatever the situation of the Austrian Army, meant that this army would be continually snapping at the Russian flank or snarling at its heels from Bukowina. To move against the plains of Hungary would mean exposing her lines of communication to serious if not fatal interruption in case the armies guarding them from the west along the Dunajec and from the east along the Stryi should give way. Russia selected the southern offensive as her choice, being influenced probably by the length of time necessary to bring an investment of Cracow wto a conclusion, by the political situation in Italy and Rumania, and by the opportunity of eliminating Austria from the war, a result that would be apt to follow a decisive defeat to practically the entire field army.

Russia's Strategy Sound.

Whatever Russia's objective was her strategy was sound. But weather conditions were all against her. The first month of the battle in the Carpathians was fought in heavy snow, the last two weeks in caseades formed by the melting snow and the Spring rains. The Russian advance, while steady, was slow. The passage of their transports retarded it, and the resistance was stronger and more sustained than had been anticipated. All conditions favored the defensive and Austria made the most of her opportunities.

Now, as to Russia's objective in this southern move. It is generally considered that it was the fertile plains of Hungary upon which not only Austria, but Germany as well, were largely dependent for their supply of grain. At the same time certain considerations make it entirely possible that the real object was an attack on Cracow from the south. Where either one of two conclusions can be drawn from the same premises it is no one's privilege to say which the Russian commander had in view.

To grasp the logic of this move as a prelude to an attack on Cracow, let us consider the position of the Austrian Army at the time Przemysl fell. This army generally occupied three sectors. The first, which was a part of the defense of Cracow, extended from a point on the Nida River due east of Czenstochowa, along the valleys of the Nida and the Dunajec to the Carpathians. The second, which defended the Carpathian passes, extended along the Galician foothills of these mountains, and the third north of Bukowina Province along the Valley of the Pruth.

For the Russians to have advanced directly on Cracow from Przemysl would, as stated before, have exposed the flank and rear of their army to an attack from practically the full Austrian strength. Their lines of communications would have been constantly menaced, and the further they advanced the greater the menace would have become. By moving south, however, their lines would be much shorter, they would be further removed from the forces of the enemy, and only a comparatively small part of the enemy's forces could be used in an attempt to cut them, the major part of such forces being engaged in defending the mountain passes. The passes through the mountains are few in number, and once taken could be held by a much smaller number of troops than was necessary to effect their capture.

Consequently, if Russia was successful in driving the Austrians south of the Carpathians, they could be held in that position through control of the passes, while the main Russian strength could then be hurled against Cracow. Austria's main army would thus be neutralized, and but a small portion of it would be between Cracow and a Russian advance from the south-east. Such a strategic plan is entirely feasible, and might readily have been in the mind of Grand Duke Nicholas when he started his army on its southern march.

Russian Line a Huge Crescent.

The preliminary conditions and possibilities of the Carpathian situation have been dwelt on thus fully in order that, while realizing to the fullest extent the seriousness of the present Russian position, we may see the situation in its true proportions. At the time the Austro-German movement against the Russian lines in Galicia was inaugurated, the general form of the Russian battle line was roughly a huge crescent. One horn of this crescent beginning on the Vistula near the small town of Nove Miasto, ran south along the Dunajec Valley to Bartfeld. The other horn, beginning just south of Stryi, followed the general line of the Stryi Valley, breaking westward toward Uzsok Pass. The line connecting the two horns ran along the summits of the Carpathians. The function of these two horns was solely to protect the lines of communications of the main Russian line along the Carpathian crests.

On April 21 the first intimation of a serious attack in force against the Russian communications was received. At that time the Austrian big guns opened on Tarnow and an attack was launched at Gorlice on the Dunajec line. The Austrian fire on Tarnow was sufficiently severe to cause the Russians to withdraw from the town, but the attack at neither Tarnow nor Gorlice was pushed, and was heard of no more until about a week ago. It should have served as a warning to Russia, however, and in some degree have prepared her for the blow which has just fallen. In addition, it was known that the Austrian forces around Cracow had been considerably augmented by German reinforcements.

The German leaders have, ever since the war began, exercised a predominant influence in Austrian councils of war and an enveloping movement involving an operation against lines of communications has ever been the favorite German strategy. All these considerations, well known to Russia, should have accentuated the danger, and should have prompted Russia to take the necessary steps to prevent the successful culmination of the Austro-German plans.

As to what has actually been accomplished through the attack along the Dunajec there is still considerable doubt. The Berlin and Vienna reports both sing a paean of victory, which victory is promptly denied by Russia, as well as by reference to the maps.

Political Situation Critical.

It must be realized that the political situation is extremely critical. The Italian Parliament convenes in the near future, and diplomatic negotiations between Germany, Austria, and Italy have reached a crisis. Notch great deal of influence will have to be exerted to cause Italy to decide one way or the other. A few weeks ago, when it seemed that Italy's decision was but a matter of hours, persistent official reports from Vienna announced and reannounced the complete defeat of the Russians, but the Russians still fought on and still gained ground. The same situation prevails now, and to arrive at the approximate truth, the effect of the political element onto the reports emanating from any quarter must receive careful consideration.

This does not mean that the reports that have reached us relative to the Austrian advance are all fabrications, made for political effect, with no basis of truth. This is far from being the case. Equall far from the truth are the reports of a total and ruinous defeat to the Russians.

On Monday, May 3, the first advices were recvier as to the general offensive against the Russians' Donajic line. Every day since, up to the time this article goes to press, Vienna reports further successes and a rigorous pursuit, sweeping on against a fleeing army. It sounds like a hopeless, disorderly rout. But let us see how much all this means when measured in miles on a map.

For example, the latest and greatest victory reported is the capture of Varnow. As stated abofe, on April 21 Vienna reported that, due to the fire of their heavy guns, the Russians were compelled to evacuate this town. The total gain during the week's fighting at this point has actually been less than five miles. This alone is sufficient to indicate the necessity of greatly tempering the claims of success before giving them credence.

That Russia is being pushed back along the Dunajec line is unquestionably true. The Austrians have forced the passage of the Dunajec River in the face of the Russian fire and have driven the Russians from the heights overlooking the river valley. Beyond all doubt the loss in prisoners and in equipment must be great. Equally certain is it that the operations in the Carpathians must come to an end. At the present time it is extremely probable that al lhighways and railroads running north from the Russian Carpathian positions are filled with transporth, heavy guns, and papaphernalia of allkinds, and that a general retreat to the plains is under way. Equally probable is it that this retreat will be accompanied by serious loss. But it is certain that when the political fog ban kis dispersed by a definite action on the part of Italy, so that we may see clearly through the mist, then tenor of the official reports will undergo a change.

Two Good Defensive Positions.

Between the present Russian position on the Dunajec front and the lines in rear of the Russian Carpathian positions, which are necessary to a Russian retreat, there are at least two good defensive positions. One of them is along the Wisloka River through Jaslo, the other along the Wisloka through Rzeszow. At both lines a stand can be made and a delaying action fought that will give Russia considerable time in which to reform her units and get her forces again under control. The last named line is fully fifty miles due east of the scene of the present advance, the first named about twelve. Russia will have ample time to reinforce her defensive line by drawing on her forces in the Carpathians before serious disaster can overtake her.

That Russia's attack in the Carpathians has in all probability failed must be generally admitted. Just what effect this will have on the eastern situation as a whole it is too soon to say. If the object of the Grand Duke Nicholas was to attack Cracow from the south his position will not be very different than it was when Przemysl fell. If the descent into the Hungarian plains was a necessary part of his plans, the total collapse of the campaign may have a very far-reaching effect, and may result in the abandonment of much of Galicia that has been taken at an enormous cost. Time alone can decide.

At the same time the Austro-German offensive along the Dunajec front has been under way, the German offensive along the Baltic has been continuously pressed. Just what the object of this move is or what it is hoped will be accomplished is somewhat difficult to see. The angle north of the line between Libau on the Baltic and Riga on the Gulf of Riga, being a productive agricultural country, will add somewhat to the visible sources of food supply. It may also at some future time serve as a base either for a movement against Kovno, an important point of support to the Russian line on the north Niemen, or, what might cause greater damage, for a movement against the flank of the entire Niemen line. In either case the Germans would be after the same objective—the Warsaw Petrograd Railroad.

Spasmodic disconnected attacks from Kalavarja to Plock have also marked the week, the offensive being taken first by Russia, then by Germany. As far as can be judged, however, these attacks have not been a part of any general plan and have served more to divert attention from the Galician fighting than to accomplish any direct purpose of their own.

On the Western Front.

In the west from Flanders to the Swiss frontier the week has seen a great number of German attacks. Many of them have been of very minor importance and with no definite object of their own. Around Ypres, however, the German attack has been insistent and generally sustained with what small advantage there is resting with Germany. Directly east of Ypres the town of Zonnebeke has been wrested from the British defenders, a gain, however, of not more than a few hundred yards. The town is almost entirely without importance from a strategical viewpoint.

The British at St. Julien have also been bent back, and this, coupled with the giving way at Zonnebeke, creates a situation in the British line that is rather uncomfortable. In the operations of the last week in April the flank of the British just north of Ypres was driven back some distance. Their line at Ypres was thus converted into a rather sharp salient. At St. Julien the Germans have driven a small wedge toward Ypres, and it is this wedge that brings in the element of danger. By advancing beyond Zonnebeke and at the same time thrusting forward the apex of the wedge at St. Julien, the section of the British line between these points is in danger of being caught between the two blades of the shears. It would not be surprising if during the coming week the British were forced to eliminate the salient and straighten out their line by retiring to a new line back of the Haanebeek River, about two miles west of Zonnebeke.

The Situation at Hill No. 60.

Far more serious to the British, however, is the reported loss of Hill No. 60, which was taken by them some two weeks ago at heavy cost. This hill, as was noted at the time, is the highest point in that section of the lowlands, and was therefore of considerable importance. The Germans have obtained a secure foothold in their old trenches, and this gives them a favorable opportunity to reform on their old line. In fact, all along the western front the Germans have recorded small gains. In most cases they have been unimportant, beyond indicating the strength of the German offensive.

The result of the week's operations therefore on both eastern and western fronts is distinctly favorable to the German cause. The latest exploit of the German submarine flotilla, however, may readily result in complications with nations now neutral so serious in character that a year's such successes as the past week has witnessed will be utterly fruitless.

GERMAN MINE SINKS A BRITISH DESTROYER

Rescuing Warship Driven Off and Eighty-eight Men Captured.

LONDON, May 8.—The following official communication was issued this evening:

"While operating off the Belgian coast the torpedo boat destroyer Maori, Commander B. W. Barrow, Royal Navy, struck a mine about two miles northwest of the Wellingen Lightship.

"The crew took to the boats when the ship was sinking. The torpedo boat destroyer Crusader, Lieut. Commander G. L. D. Mebbs in command, which was in company with the Maori, lowered her boats to assist in picking up the crew of the Maori, but the enemy then opened fire from shore batteries, and the Crusader, after being under fire for an hour and a half, had to leave her boats and retire.

"It is reported from German sources that the crew of the Maori and the boats' crew of the Crusader—seven officers and eighty-eight men in all—were taken prisoners into Zeebrugge."

BERLIN, (via London), May 8.—An official communication by the German War Office announces the sinking of the British destroyer Maori in these words:

"The British destroyer Maori was sunk off Zeebrugge. The destroyer Crusader, which had come to its support, was forced to retreat and leave in the lurch lifeboats which it had launched.

"The entire crew of the Maori and the boats crews of the Crusader were saved by our own vessels and taken into Zeebrugge. In all there were seven officers and eighty-eight men."

The Maori was 280 feet long and of 1,035 tons displacement. She was built in 1909, and her complement was seventy-one men. She was armed with two 4-inch guns and two torpedo tubes.

URGES A WORLD TRIBUNAL.

Justice W. L. Smith's Plan for Enforcing International Law.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, May 8.—Justice Walter Lloyd Smith of the Appellate Division, in participating in the laying of the corner stone of Albany's million-dollar Court House this afternoon, took occasion to refer to the conflict in Europe.

"Turn with me for a moment to the world's history and to the present spectacle in Europe, and we find a strange contradiction," said Justice Smith. "Rulers of nations who for themselves individually recognize the necessity of enforceable law, claim for the nations they represent the rights of highwaymen. The barbaric doctrine that might makes right is claimed for nations to be governing law. Weaker nations are the prey of the stronger and are absorbed by force against their will, with only pretext of right. Treaty obligations solemnly assumed are disregarded because inconvenient to be kept. A code of ethics which has arisen by common consent of nations and has been recognized as our international law, proves of no binding effect upon the consciences of nations. The term national morality has well nigh become a mockery. What is needed is an international court to which all international controversies must be submitted and invested with power to enforce its decrees.

"To establish such a court requires as a foundation an international confederation, with a constitution defining the exact powers conferred upon the government to be created. The problems presented by this plan are not of easy solution, but are of possible and probable solution in analogy with our Union of States. When our Union was formed a thousand objections were urged, which have been completely answered by the entire lack of friction between the States, except that resting upon the moral question of slavery, which once threatened our disruption. Armaments will then be limited not by the Constitution but by lack of necessity, because the rights of the constituent nations will be guaranteed by the central Government."

WAR'S EFFECT ON OUR WOOL SUPPLY

Demands of 15,000,000 Men on Fighting Line May Curtail Goods for Civilians.

DYE FAMINE THREATENED

Merchants Think It Likely That Only Black and White Can Be Worn if War Lasts Long.

One of the leading wool firms of New York has come to the conclusion that as a result of the war persons will be wearing fewer suits next year, and will probably be paying more for them, and that it is far from impossible that colors will have disappeared and everybody will be wearing black and white. This conclusion was reached after making plentiful allowance for the factors that will tend to reduce the stringency, and represents a conservative view of the probable effect of the war upon American textiles. In detail the situation as viewed by an authority on the American domestic and foreign woolen trade is as follows:

The average life of a uniform in the trenches is only three weeks. After that a new uniform is issued, and what is left of the old one is burned. It cannot even be made up into "shoddy," for in the trenches it has become verminous and there is danger of contagion. Even on garrison duty the average uniform is worn out after six weeks' service.

15,000,000 Men to Clothe Now.

There are probably 15,000,000 men under arms by this time in the European armies, and each of them at the front would need seventeen or eighteen uniforms a year. Of course, the actual number used is not as high as this. In the first place, a large percentage is at all times on garrison duty. Moreover, it may be doubted if the Balkan and the Russian armies are as well supplied as they ought to be, and even in the west there was at first among the Allies an insufficient supply of uniforms.

But making all allowances for this, it is probable that each soldier will average nine uniforms a year. Comparatively few of these 15,000,000 men were more than two suits of clothes a year in time of peace, and many of them wore only one. Consequently it may be estimated safely that not less than 100,000,000 uniforms will have to be provided for every year of the fighting above the normal consumption in time of peace.

These uniforms are made of wool. Most of the Continental armies have always used all-wool uniforms. The British Army is clad in khaki, which was originally invented in India and was at first a cotton fabric. It was in cotton khaki that the American troops were dressed at first in 1898, but before the soldiers from the Northern States had been in the tropical camps very long it was found that, inasmuch as the cotton fabric was waterproof, the soldiers who perspired heavily found themselves in great discomfort on account of the lack of evaporation.

So a New York firm began to supply a wool khaki—in effect a light serge—and this wool khaki, porous and much cooler than its cotton predecessor, is now the suiting of the British Army, as well as of the American. This puts all the armies fighting in Europe on an all-wool basis; the 100,000,000 uniforms must come out of the world's wool supply. As an average of ten pounds of wool is used in making each uniform, there is a billion pounds of wool for this item alone.

But there is also the question of underclothing to be considered. Woolen underclothing is needed for Winter campaigning at least, and for that in hot weather as far as possible, and most of the peasants who are now in the fighting line never wore a suit of underclothes in their lives before they went to war. So here, again, is an enormous increase—almost as large as that required for uniforms—in the world's consumption of wool.

Supply Too Small Before the War

The normal production of wool the world over before the war was just about equal to the consumption and it had become a serious question in the minds of textile men what was going to happen in the course of the next half century. The population of the world was increasing, the area available for grazing purposes for sheep was constantly diminishing as the waste places filled up. The problem was just beginning to occupy the attention of men who were looking ahead into the relatively distant future when the war came on, and suddenly made it an acute question of the present. The result is already apparent in Europe in the shape of a 25 per cent. increase in the price of crossbred wools, from which uniform cloths are made.

In this country it has not yet been felt so much, but woolen men are convinced that by next Spring the pinch will be evident to everybody. Indeed, English manufacturers, from whom much of the local supply is obtained, have in many cases absolutely refused to quote prices for next Spring, although this is the season when American dealers are customarily arranging for their stock for the following year.

The British woolen industry has taken hold of the situation with great vigor, and has saved the present situation for Great Britain at the expense of other countries. Many American experts thought at the outbreak of the war that the English mills would hardly get enough orders to make it worth while to keep open, as they had an enormous Continental trade, especially with Germany. This huge export to Germany had been built up mainly by virtue of the German system of free ports.

German middlemen were enabled to import a varied stock of woolens into the free ports, cut the individual pieces up according to the needs indicated by their orders, and ship part of their goods into Germany, paying the import duties, while distributing the rest over the world at a profit. The efforts of the Merchants' Association to have New York made a free port are aimed at making possible such traffic here. At present goods may be brought over in bond, but this applies only to full cases of any one item; and the breaking up of individual pieces by which German dealers made most of their profits has been impossible.

The huge German trade built up by this system brought in consequence an enormous volume of woolen imports from British mills. With this business lost in a moment by the declaration of war many students of the situation thought that the British mills would be all but wiped out; but, instead, they have been working night and day to supply the enormous, the wholly unprecedented demands of the armies, which no one had foreseen because no such situation had ever arisen. Trade papers report that in the first week of last October the city of Huddersfield alone was turning out twenty-five miles of khaki a week, and this figure has probably been doubled by this time. Consequently, with all the British mills working to supply the Allied armies, it has been found next to impossible to get them to fill any orders for neutrals.

Raw Wool Cornered by the British.

The British Army has cornered the raw materials as well as the manufactured product. Australia and New Zealand are at present the leading producers of wool. The United States is going backward as a sheep-raising country; the Argentine is coming forward, but has as yet failed to equal either of the British dominions; Siberia, where anything is possible, has hardly even started. Shortly after the war started, an embargo was put on the export of wool from all British dominions; and while this has been somewhat relaxed now that the British Empire has assured its own supply for at least the next year, it is fairly certain that the embargo will again come down as hard as ever when there is need.

American woolen houses have had other troubles on account of the war. Instead of buying goods and leaving them in London for some months afterward, as has frequently been done in the past, American dealers have been having such pieces as they could buy shipped over at once and are holding them in New York. It is denied that there is any especial fear that the British Government will seize the goods; but it is pointed out that beside the constant possibility of danger from the submarine blockade, the turn of war operations may at any moment make shipment next to impossible. One instance has been mentioned of a shipment of woolens from Liverpool to London, destined for an American house, which lay at Clapham Junction, in the suburbs of London, for three weeks, while trains bearing troops and munitions of war were occupying the attention of the railroad authorities. A species of wool grown only in the Shetland Islands is much used in the better class of Scotch tweeds. But the Shetlands lie in the very centre of the area where the British battle fleet lurks much of the time; and the consequence is that for weeks at a stretch there is no communication between them and the mainland.

Demand Likely to Decrease.

However, it is not to be assumed that all America is suddenly going to be compelled to stay indoors for lack of clothes. While the prospects are bad enough, there are alleviating features. In the first place, there is not likely to be much of a stringency in this country for another year, and there is always a possibility that the war may be over by that time. Again, the increase in the price of woolens will not mean that the supply will suddenly disappear, but that the normal demand will be decreased until the supply will again cover it—in other words, that the man who now wears three suits a year will hereafter wear two.

The possibility of the substitution of cotton and other fabrics is not believed to offer much relief, according to the best authorities; persons who have become used to the advantages of wool in comfort and appearance would rather make their woolen clothes last longer than put up with an inferior substitute. The importation of increased quantities of wool from the Argentine, and the possible extension of sheep raising in the United States should the demand warrant it, is another way out which if the war is prolonged may ultimately solve the question. But in this connection it is pointed out that the nature of wool is determined not by the breed of the sheep, but by climatic conditions.

Take sheep from Australia and sheep from Kentucky and transplant them to the Shetland Islands and before long their wool will have in the main the same characteristics as that of the sheep which have been domiciled in the Shetlands for generations. So that while the development of other wool centres offers a possible ultimate relief of the stringency, it will mean that for the immediate future textile manufacturers must use raw materials with whose characteristics they are not yet fully acquainted and that the public will have to get used to doing without its favorite fabrics and putting up with substitutes which will be in all cases more or less strange, and usually less satisfactory.

Dye Supply Threatened.

As England has control of wool and woolen goods, so Germany dominates the market of the dyestuffs which are used to color the fabrics, and here, according to the same authority, conditions are no less serious. All the dyes in use in this country, and most of those used in England, come from Germany, and the supply is now practically shut off. The most obvious measure of relief from this situation is to go back to vegetable dyes, which up to about twenty years ago were in universal use.

For example, blue serge, now colored by coal-tar dyes, was formerly dyed with indigo. But indigo and many other vegetable dyes are inclined to crock—that is, to rub off with wear and to lose their effectiveness, which coal-tar dyes do not do. A public used to fast colors is not likely to be willing to go back to goods that crock. The natural effort of all countries outside of Germany is, of course, to manufacture substitutes, and the work that Edison and other inventors have already done in this line is known. But the difficulty is that the Germans have the facilities for manufacturing coal-tar dyes more efficiently and more cheaply than can be done elsewhere, and as soon as the war is over it is certain that they will be able to undersell all competitors.

Under such circumstances capitalists in England and America are unlikely to be willing to sink their funds into a venture which may be almost a total loss by the time it has got well started. In England there is a movement on foot to start a company with Government support to manufacture such dyes, but about the only hope for such an enterprise in this country would rest in the imposition of a heavy protective tariff on foreign manufactures. And while chemists and economists are trying to solve this question the price of indigo, the unsatisfactory substitute, has gone up in England to about six times what it was before the war, and men well informed are prophesying that within a year people will be wearing nothing but black and white.

The New Glories of Paris Will Be Disclosed in Tomorrow's Display

New Summer Millinery

at $8.75 to $28

This Display of Chapeaux will prove, as our hats have never done before, the superiority of GIMBEL Millinery.

The Parisian modistes have created new modes that are simple in contour but very elaborate—rather intricate—in detail. A notable example is the Reboux model, which is illustrated. It required one of our most skilled milliners three days to reproduce this hat. And yet our price is only $28.

Marie Louise's Compose Hat of Tulle and Twisted Swiss Straw
Leghorn Hats Appliqued With Flowered Cretonne
Reboux's Hats of Straw Appliqued With Eyelet Embroidery

are just a few of the new Parisian modes which we have faithfully copied—yes, faithfully copied—for our hats are of the same fine French materials as those adopted by the Paris modistes for their original models.

THE LAW OF THE LUSITANIA CASE.

The rule of maritime warfare which imposes upon the commander of a ship of war the duty of providing for the safety of the passengers and crew of any vessel he may elect to destroy is plain, unmistakable in its application to every case, and it has been everywhere and by all civilized nations accepted as a binding obligation. The rule is of such universal acceptance and assent that the text writers for the most part mention it only in passing allusions, as when HOLLAND says that "if ship and cargo belong beyond question to the enemy" the captor may "after taking off the crew sink the ship." In the rules relating to the destroying of prizes adopted by the Institute of International Law at Turin in 1882, it was declared that "in any case the captor must remove the persons on board." The German Government in an official document at the beginning of the war railed at France and England for allying themselves with Russia, a nation of "unculture" and barbarism, yet in the Russian special instructions to naval commanders issued in 1900 it was declared that "the commander of the imperial cruiser has the right to burn or sink a detained vessel after having previously taken therefrom the crew." In all discussions of maritime warfare the obligation to save crew and passengers is assumed, precisely as in any comment upon criminal law it would be assumed that in all countries murder is made a punishable crime.

The man in the street may have some possible excuse for ignorance of this humane usage of war, but it is something more than surprising to hear from the lips of Senator WILLIAM STONE of Missouri, Chairman of the Senate Committee on Foreign Relations, these insinuated excuses or palliations of the dastardly crime committed by Germany in destroying the Lusitania without warning and with brutal indifference to the fate of her company that there are more than 1,400 names in the list of the [illegible]

We cannot overlook the fact that the Lusitania was a British ship flying the British flag and subject at any time to be put into actual naval service of the Government. Indeed, it is stated that at the time she was attacked she was carrying military reservists to England for service in the British Army. True, the passengers went aboard a belligerent ship with full knowledge of the risk and after official warning by the German Government. When on board a British vessel they were on British soil. Was not their position substantially equivalent to being within the walls of a fortified city? If American citizens stay within a city besieged or threatened and the enemy attacks, what should our Government do if our citizens should be injured?

We overlook nothing, we take full account of all the facts—that the Lusitania was an enemy ship flying the enemy flag, that she was carrying munitions of war to the enemy, and had on board reservists sailing for service in the British Army. These undisputed facts gave the commander of the German submarine the right to destroy the ship. Nothing could give him the right to destroy or to imperil her crew and passengers. Senator STONE stumbles into a comparison with the status of neutrals within the walls of a fortified city under siege. But international law requires the besieging force to give notice of bombardment. "The officer in command of an attacking force," so runs the language of The Hague Convention, "must, before "commencing a bombardment, in cases "of assault, do all in his power to "warn the authorities." Neither in law nor in custom is there any extenuation for this act of monstrous inhumanity, no exception, no condition, can be made to shield it from the full force and condemnation it deserves and has received. And the warning advertisement published by the German Embassy here, by [illegible] notice of an intent to commit a crime, is of no more avail for [illegible] than a Black Hand letter of threat.

The rule of mercy to the crew and passengers of captured merchant ships of the enemy rests upon the universal principle that the operations of war are carried on against armed forces, not against the enemy's peaceable citizens or subjects, certainly never against neutrals. It rests upon the principle of the instructions for the government of the armies of the United States in the field during the civil war, a code prepared by Dr. LIEBER and revised by the hand of ABRAHAM LINCOLN, in which it was declared that men in arms remain "moral beings responsible to one another and to GOD." Germany snapped her fingers at the laws of war and at the law of morality when she did this deed of blood. She put herself outside the domain of law, and it is a frequent comment upon her behavior that by that act she confessed herself to be an outlaw nation. We know now how she makes war, how she intends to make war—that discussion is ended. Had we known on Aug. 1 what is now made so painfully clear to us we should beyond all doubt have taken a different course. We passed over in silence the lawless violence and carnage visited upon Belgium by the German invader, although many prominent Americans insisted that we should then have registered our firm protest against cruel spoliation in violation of neutral rights under treaty signed by the spoiler. We should have protested, doubtless, against the promiscuous sowing of mines in the North Sea by Germany, we should have shown less forbearance in the cases of the Frye and the Cushing, the Falaba and the Gulflight.

Now that we are warned that Germany has resolved to make war in disregard of the laws of GOD and man, like a Malay running amuck, we know what to do. The time for protests has passed. It becomes now our duty as a nation to demand that Germany shall find means to carry on her war without putting our citizens to death. It is a demand in which other neutral nations will have the right to join, for aboard the Lusitania there were Danes, Swedes, Greeks, Italians, and other neutrals. It may be said that in this demand we should call upon Germany to surrender her right to fight her enemy in her own way. It is precisely that. Her own way is that tigerish ferocity of which neither her neutrals nor her enemies have believed her capable. Beyond the pale of law she has no right, and she went far outside all law when she prearranged and executed the destruction of the Lusitania. It may be said that the presentation of such a demand might involve us in war with Germany. We are not of that opinion. There are measures short of war which may be taken to assert the rights and manifest the just resentment of a nation. And they are measures which the men of power in Germany would not lightly disregard unless they are lost in madness.

But if the dispatch without warning of torpedoes against the great Lusitania with 2,000 human beings on board is to be accepted as a true manifestation of the German spirit, if Germany proclaims it, if she has deliberately determined that all the world shall know that this is the way in which she proposes to make war, that this is her attitude toward law, this is the measure of her humanity, then all neutral nations are on notice that the complete defeat of Germany and eradication of the military spirit of Germany are essential to their peace and safety, and they will feel that they have tenfold greater reason for desiring, and in the extreme emergency for helping to bring about, that saving consummation.

PLENTY OF BREAD.

Nobody had ventured to hope for such crop indications as the Government report affords. On the largest acreage ever planted the Winter killing is the smallest known. The promise of Winter wheat is 693,000,000 bushels, against the promise of 619,000,000 a month ago. Last year's crop was thought wonderful, but this year's should exceed it. It would require only 200,000,000 bushels of Spring wheat in addition to equal last year's total, but the Spring wheat crop ought to be a record breaker also. The acreage is larger than last year, the sowing is further advanced and under better conditions of soil and moisture. Only abnormally bad conditions can prevent an aggregate of wheat above anything known. There will be less rejoicing over the question of what the crop will be worth. Only the farmers will be glad that the price on May 1 this year was $1.39, against 83 cents last year. It is a huge addition to the national assets, but at a price taken from those who can ill afford it at a time of distress throughout the world, which must be fed by us to an extent never before experienced.

Professor MALTHUS did not include the United States in his philosophy. He taught that the food supply of the world increases only in mathematical ratio, but that the ratio of increase of population is geometrical. Therefore the world would be hungry if it continued to have children. It is now only a few years since that doctrine was applied to the United States. A poor crop year was picked out, of course, since a year like this would not have supported the theory. The result of the figuring was that the population had increased 21 per cent. in a decade, while the yield of cereals had increased less than 2 per cent. Anybody can see that at that rate it would be necessary for Americans to emigrate to countries where the production per acre is double that of the United States. That seems precious foolishness now. The reason that the crops were bad about that time was only in part due to the weather. The price was too low to warrant production. At a price there is hardly a limit to what the earth of the United States can produce. In 1879 the value of farm produce was a little over $2,000,000,000. This year it will exceed last year's ten billions. And the farms have doubled in value. There is something over a billion of acres capable of cultivation and less than half a billion are under culture.

THE ADMIRALTY'S NEGLECT.

There was a firm conviction among the friends of the American passengers on the Lusitania, especially in view of the German threat to destroy her, that the British Navy would provide warships to convoy her to her port. Nobody believed that she would be permitted to enter the so-called war zone without due provision for her safety. The neglect of the Admiralty, either to send armored cruisers to meet her or to warn her Captain by wireless of the presence of German submarines in her course, seems unaccountable. The relative importance of the Lusitania in the British mercantile marine led Americans who had business interests to look after in England to believe that, however unsafe navigation of the waters around the British Islands might be, no effort would be lacking to insure the safety of that vessel, carrying more than 2,000 men, women, and children. But no word of warning reached Captain TURNER that the danger had increased in those waters, although twenty-two vessels, one American and two others of neutral countries, had been torpedoed between the day of his sailing and the destruction of his ship. It seems that the Lusitania should have been warned to change her course and seek a port on the west of Ireland or further north, if warships and destroyers could not be spared for her convoy.

There is only one possible explanation for the British Admiralty's neglect of its plain duty, which has resulted in such terrible fatalities. Perhaps the British Government could not believe, in spite of the many recent revelations of the unutterable brutality of the Germans, that any nation would be guilty of a crime so shocking, so unnecessary, and in violation of all the rules of warfare. If that is the explanation, an unfortunate delusion has been dispelled forever.

DANTE, MAGGIO 1265—MAY 1915.

Some time in the month of May, 650 years ago, the poet DANTE was born in the City of Florence. He wrote a little love story in verse and prose, in which autobiography and allegory are curiously blended, called "Life Made New"; a long epic describing his imaginary journey to "Hell," "Purgatory," and "Paradise," also allegorical and autobiographic, which he entitled "The Comedy," simply because it had a happy ending; several essays and letters on political and scientific subjects, and a few songs.

Some of these things he wrote in Latin, but those for which he is most famous he wrote in the speech of the people of Florence and the neighborhood—a speech which, fifty years before his birth, had not found expression through written words. In other parts of Italy people were speaking other languages, while those who could write at all still wrote in Latin; but DANTE so contrived to elevate the speech of the Florentines that he made it surpass them all, so that today it is the language of a great people.

But DANTE did more than elevate a language, for the steady growth of his fame through the centuries is more of a psychological than a literary or philological phenomenon. No one may place his finger on this or that phase of his work or character and say: "Here is the cause of his fame!" All form a part of the harmonious, completed whole—the romance of his youth, his fight with the Florentine Tammany in which he was defeated and driven forth with the sentence of death hanging over him, his wanderings and the legends inspired therefrom, and the alluring mystery of his life and writings, which have been productive of a bibliography in all languages so vast that it is only surpassed by that of the Bible.

But of all the multifarious qualities attributed to him by those who have attempted to add to human knowledge through his genius, that of prophecy, which the monstrous events of his six hundred and fiftieth anniversary bring prominently to the attention, is worthy of note. Everybody is more or less of a prophet, according to one's ability to learn lessons from experience, but the prophecies of great men receive more attention because they have been placed upon conspicuous record. Thus BENJAMIN FRANKLIN so placed his in regard to the future of the British Empire when he stood before the bar of the British House of Commons in February, 1766, and foretold a confederation of Commonwealths under one imperial head. DANTE in the first part of his "Comedy" foresees a deliverer who was to come to Italy. But even as late as 1840 that deliverer had not arrived, and CARLYLE then wrote of his absence in his "Hero as Prophet": "Italy, for example, poor Italy, lies "dismembered, scattered asunder, not "appearing in any protocol or treaty "as a unity at all; yet the noble Italy "is actually one: Italy produced "DANTE; Italy can speak."

Today Italy is on the point of swinging the balance of Europe. Without expecting too much from the Dantesque gift of prophecy, the following passage from "Purgatory" may at least be regarded as a remarkable coincidence. The shade of HUGH CAPET, a sort of left-handed cousin of an ancestor of the present German Emperor, thus speaks to the poet:

> I was the root whence sprang that evil plant
> Which casts such shade o'er all the Christian land
> That good fruit is but rarely plucked from it.
> But if Douai, Lille, Ghent and Bruges had
> The power, vengeance would be taken soon;
> And I implore it of the Judge of all.
> [Canto XX., Line 43, HENRY JOHNSON'S Translation.]

DANTE, in his Latin treatise on "Government," sees the vision of a world empire; and, if we take what he symbolizes under the terms of Emperor and Pope as the authority of the people and the authority of the people's conscience working in unison for universal harmony, we may see therein the great adjustment of tomorrow. For DANTE, in times of bloodshed and destruction similar to our own, wrote with clear vision:

> Of all things that are ordered to secure blessings to men peace is the best; by quiet the individual man grows perfect in wisdom; and society as a whole is best fitted in the tranquility of peace for its proper work, which may be called divine.

DRYASDUST SEEKS "ORIGINS."

Nothing alarms Dryasdust so much as a figure of speech or a nickname that does not rest on facts, mathematics, or statistics. Nothing so disturbs him as a phrase he does not understand; and he does not rest until he has evoked an "origin" for it. One of his worshippers writes to The World protesting against "to the manner born." It should be "to the manor "born—that is, born on the estate, and "therefore familiar with the place." "Manner," pursues Dryasdust, Jr., "is acquired, and one cannot be born to it." No, and one cannot be born with a silver spoon in his mouth; it would choke him, Dryasdust. Nevertheless, he is born with a manner, abhorrent as such flights of fancies are to your precise soul.

The original Dryasdust who invented this "origin" to plague unborn generations—for his descendants will be persisting in their pedantic folly about the phrase long after we are all dead—slid gracefully over the fact that when Hamlet used it he was not talking about a manor, but about a palace, in which the manner or custom of getting drunk was being punctiliously observed; he was, in fact, delivering a lecture on temperance, which he admitted was against the manner and custom of that palace. "Is it a custom?" asked Horatio, referring to the spree about to begin; and Hamlet said:

> Ay, marry is't:
> But to my mind—though I am native here
> And to the manner born—it is a custom
> More honor'd in the breach than the observance.

He went on to denounce this old manner or custom as a "hoary-headed revel" which made the Danes "traduc'd and tax'd of other nations," who "clepe us drunkards." However, what is that to Dryasdust? The fact remains, and it is the only fact that his eyes can see, that one can't be born with a manner. So, when some frisky and humorous Briton nicknamed melted cheese with the immortal and gloriously nonsensical title "Welsh rabbit," Dryasdust was pained and puzzled; it was not a rabbit, it was not any kind of game, it was cheese. Therefore he rested not until he had found an "origin"; and his descendants to this day painstakingly spell it "Welsh rarebit," and rest satisfied in the consciousness of culture. In our own time Dryasdust has outdone himself by seeking an "origin" for that profane British adjective "bloody"; it is, he joyfully trumpets after long subterranean delving, a "contraction of the mediaeval oath 'By our Lady.'" According to him, therefore, a mediaeval ruffler was wont to say, "Waiter, this check is "too by-our-Lady high; I didn't order "these by-our-Lady onions." Bosh, Dryasdust, bosh! Idioms, figures of speech, nicknames, and slang are made in no such way; often they have no "origins" at all, in any such sense as you use the word. Off with your strait-jacket, Dryasdust, and your blinders, and look about you.

CHARLES FROHMAN.

The loss of CHARLES FROHMAN will be deeply felt, and not only in the theatrical world of America and England, in which he has been a dominating figure for many years. He was energetic, indomitable, and sincere in his efforts to produce good plays as well as possible in view of the economic condition of the contemporary theatre, in his encouragement of dramatists and actors. He was in no sense responsible for economic conditions, he did not destroy the old stock company system, but did his best to keep it alive at some large pecuniary loss; he did not invent the system of traveling companies, he did not lay the foundations of the commercialization of the theatre. But with clear vision he saw, before others could see, the course theatricals were bound to take in this country unless all theatrical management was to be involved in ruin, and with an inborn skill of organization he met the situation and was instrumental in the upbuilding of the calling he had chosen.

Although he had the active help of others who were often men of keener business sense, it was his brain that conceived the plans of mutual cooperation which saved the theatre after the havoc of the dreary old Haverly days. He did more than that. He managed many theatres with skill, he gave to America the very best that the foreign stage produced in his time, not the erotic and degenerate, but the meritorious and wholesome. His influence extended in time to all departments of the theatre, transformed the careless and heedless thespians of old into practical folk. He made a business of theatricals, of course, but the theatre always had its business side, though it was often pretty poor business, driving most of the managers to poverty, while the actor, who lived to please, too frequently found it easier to please than to live. There are still evils to be remedied in the theatre. A successor to CHARLES FROHMAN will be sadly needed.

Mr. FROHMAN, though he kept himself in seclusion and avoided personal publicity all his life, was inevitably a man of many friends. All who ever had relations with him esteemed him. His courage and ambition were not more conspicuous traits than his probity and generosity.

ART IS TIMELESS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Martini's conception of a school of art is very curious. In fact any school based upon his premises and opinions would be incongruous and nearly useless!

Those main principles of construction, proportion, theory of color, values, which are the bases of all art production and which he justly says remain the same, are the only things that can be taught in a school—are the only things that should be taught—but they should be taught well and slowly.

Art is not in a race. It is not necessary for it to have any "pace." It cannot have it. All through the ages certain individuals appear with an extraordinary development of vision, hearing, sense of language or mechanics. They are the Michael Angelos, Beethovens, Shakespeares, Newtons, &c.; upon their original discoveries or combinations maxims and rules are formulated for the guidance (if such be possible) of the less gifted who elect to become art workers. Some of these less gifted individuals love their calling—most of them today are pursuing it for purely commercial reasons, and we have the manifestation of this fact glaring at us in the magazines, on the stage, and, alas! in our art shops and exhibitions.

I remember paying a visit to a great Western school of art and suddenly coming upon some students (men and women) at work upon a huge canvas in the so-called "decoration class." Great pots of lurid paint were on the floor and some of it had got on the immense canvas. There was no drawing, no design, but these students were expressing themselves, I suppose, and possibly having a good time? This school was keeping up with the "times" and the demand for large decorations! It had pace.

No! Everything that has to do with art education should be very slow, very careful, very painstaking, and be in no way concerned with the "times." The subject matter of art is negligible. It is the same always, a mere motive for the expression of the particular individual.

The elements of technique which may help to lead this individual on to his full expression are the only things that can be taught in schools. These elements remain almost fixed! They should be exercises in accuracy, patience, and sincerity! All taught slowly! Such teaching cannot impede the genius and may help the mediocre to become useful! ALBERT STERNER.

New York, May 4.

Running the Navy.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The series of letters with "learned length and thundering sound" that are now appearing signed by ex-Secretary of the Navy Meyer certainly make it appear that Mr. Meyer had while at the head of the Navy Department a wonderful grasp of the detail affairs of his office. Mr. Meyer's office hours were from 11 A. M. to 1:20 P. M., and again from 4 to 4:30 P. M., when he came by on horseback and in riding boots, stopping at the department for this half hour to sign any mail that was ready for him. Mr. Daniels reaches the department at 9:15 A. M. and remains until 6 P. M., with fifteen minutes for his lunch, which is sent to his desk. Mr. Daniels puts in more time at his desk, sees more people and transacts more business in a day than Mr. Meyer ever did in a month. Furthermore, Mr. Daniels had more intimate knowledge of the detail affairs of his office after a month in the chair than Mr. Meyer did when he gave up the post.

Ignoring the Devil.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Attention has been frequently called in your columns to the "Rev." B. Sunday's seeming familiarity with God, but I have not yet noted any reference to his apparent familiarity with the devil also. How does he know that the devil (in company with Dean West) disapproves of his methods? And when he jollies his Satanic Majesty "in meeting," does he really think he sees him there? And if he really thinks he sees him there, by what line of thought does he conclude that his methods are not approved?

Personally, I do not care for our "reverend's" ways, and have not attended his meetings, but then, you see, the devil and I disagree on many points. J. R. P.

The Persistent "September Morn."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I quite agree with your correspondent, who complains of the tendency toward lewdness in the pictures of nude women so much in evidence in certain sorts of shop windows. The sad part of it is, however, that—providing he is right in ascribing it to the publication of "September Morn"—it would probably never have arisen had it not been for Anthony Comstock. READER.

THE EVICTION.

> In Killydart I stood beside
> A mountain torrent's downward tide
> Whose waves have fallen on my heart
> Since first I dreamed in Killydart—
> And that was long ago!
>
> In Killydart I sat between
> Two ruined walls, now mossy green,
> Which, once upon a happy time,
> Wore rosy vines and sunny lime—
> But that was long ago!
>
> In Killydart I stood today,
> Although a waste of sea away,
> And, dreaming, heard my mother call:
> "They're going to batter in the wall!"
> Och! that was long ago!
>
> For Killydart is now a grove
> Wherein his lordship's deer may rove,
> And I am singing for the Sword
> That once upheld the Irish Lord.
> But that was long ago!

FRANCIS CARLIN.

THE ABSENT BRITISH NAVY.

A Traveler's Testimony on the Lack of Protection to Shipping.

New York, May 8, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Accusations amounting to criminal negligence are being hurled on all sides at the British Admiralty. Perhaps a simple statement of fact in connection with recent travel between the United States, England, and the Continent will not be out of place in reaching a just conclusion.

The writer left New York on the Baltic on March 8 last. On Feb. 18, the German war zone decree became effective. I was informed by one of the Baltic's officers that she carried a cargo of war munitions and material consigned to the British Government, amounting to the enormous sum of $2,500,000, and that the profit to the ship on freight alone totaled the large sum of $40,000. The decks were literally covered with armored motor lorries, nearly 200 in number. About 9 in the evening of March 11 shore lights were seen off the Irish coast. The next day was calm and brilliant and we reached Liverpool about 4 in the afternoon. The Baltic was the first large boat to sail into the war zone after the German decree became effective, and her freight capacity, (completely filled,) was greater than that of any boat entering the German self-inhibited area. At daybreak on the morning of the 12th I went out on deck, expecting to see a convoy of destroyers. The boat sailed her usual course and notwithstanding no convoy came in sight until about one hour from the bar at Liverpool, corresponding to Quarantine here, at which time a destroyer came to give comfort. On the very day that the Baltic reached the Irish Coast the English papers announced the torpedoing of the Indian City, the Headlands, the Andalusian, and the Florisan, all British merchantmen. These boats were torpedoed on the west, south, and east coasts of the British Islands. The Baltic came up the channel making under fifteen knots an hour.

During March and April I made a number of crossings to the Continent, via Folkestone-Boulogne, and not once was a convoy furnished.

I returned on the last voyage that the Lusitania made, and again no convoy was in sight.

Reliance on the possibilities of the ship's wireless would hardly be sufficient to exculpate the Admiralty, because obviously a submarine could torpedo successfully before a destroyer or like protector could reach the attacked vessel, and a wireless could only be of assistance in bringing aid after the vessel had been attacked.

It should be said in justice to the owners that on every boat I observed an ample supply of life belts and all life boats were swung out and life-boat decks cleared immediately upon leaving dock or on entering dangerous waters.

When will Britain awake and realize that the characteristic smugness that comes from her insularity is a very real danger to her?

Thoughts in a Death Chamber.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I visited Sing Sing recently and had my first vital impression of the death chair and its surroundings. The barrenness of the death chamber; the fact that eighteen men were behind that wall awaiting abnormal extinction; the used appearance of the chair; the slate slab upon which the autopsy is held; the morgue at the side, and the cemetery on the hill—the sombre suggestiveness of these impressions aroused in me a deep regret that the money I spend in New York must go toward the enforcement of a law which makes all of them matter of fact.

If the people who spend money in New York could line up and pass through the death chamber at Sing Sing, built and maintained by their funds, I fully believe that the common mind would take that chair and all of its accompaniments used in the "extinction" and either dump them in the river or place them in a museum for the stimulation of the wonder, awe, and pity of posterity. There must be a more civilized method by which society can preserve its safety than the present slow, padded, guarded, and terrifying, though "well-fed," way which leads the cold-blooded murderer through that bleak and barren chamber and out onto that hilltop. ROBERT BERTRAND BROWN.

Pacifically Speaking.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At the edge of a populous city there lies a park, fresh now in its garments of Spring. It borders on a river, and across the river are trees and grass-covered slopes. Everywhere the new life of May. The grass proclaims it, and the leaves and birds. In the midst of this scene of abundant and bounding life—for ten noisy days of jingoist patriotism—there come horrible, ugly engines of death—scores of them, dark and menacing. They are anchored in the middle of our beautiful river, a blot on the landscape, as well as a blot on our civilization.

Why are they here? Why, with their ten days of "ball games and theatre parties, afternoon and evening, for enlisted men"? Principally for the purpose of persuading some hundreds of peaceful-minded civilians to leave useful walks of life and take up the work of rendering more efficient these machines of death.

Society safeguards the imagination of youth by censoring moving-picture plays. Some day society will see to it that children and young men are not fired to enthusiasm for war by a holiday parade of dreadnoughts and submarines.

Bach in Petrograd.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Shortly after the beginning of the war there have appeared reports in the newspapers to the effect that during the coming Winter no music of German composers would be played in the concert halls of Petrograd. I have before me a recent issue of the Petrograd newspaper Retch, on the front page of which there appears a prominent advertisement announcing that a concert is to be given in the Main Hall of the Conservatory for the benefit of war sufferers and that the program will consist of music by Schubert, Schumann, and Bach. This seems conclusively to prove that the Russian public is not so narrow-minded or "un-kultured" as suddenly to discriminate against those immortal Germans who have been so loved and revered in Russia prior to the war.

It would be interesting to know what fate had been meted out to works of Tschaikowsky, Rimsky-Korsakow, and Rachmaninoff in Berlin and Vienna. J. G. FOURMAN.

Motley's the Wear!

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Daniel E. Motley has proposed a novel remedy for the benefit of mossbacks, who claim that they are unable to find work. It is embodied in a simple formula: The business world wants spirit. Age tends to sloth and broken-spiritedness, with a tendency, also, to put off. If you don't want to be put off—stay young. Motley's the only wear.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why not have every tenth car a "bundle car," and require any person carrying bundles above a certain size (or style) to wait for this car? Of course, others than those carrying bundles might or might not be permitted to use such a car. A WOMAN.

MR. WICKERSHAM APPEALS FOR ACTION.

It Is Time for American People to Abandon a Sexless Policy and Be Virile or Sink to China's Level.

By GEORGE W. WICKERSHAM,
Formerly United States Attorney General.

40 Wall Street,
New York, May 8, 1915.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The destruction of the Lusitania by the Germans, and the wanton killing of American men, women and children, without warning, brings sharply before the American people the question of how long the present sexless policy of the conduct of our affairs is to be continued. Germany has apparently decided to run amuck with civilization. It is now for the American people to decide whether this nation has any virility left, or if it is content to sink to the level of China.

A very clear course, it seems to me, is open for us to pursue: We should cancel all diplomatic relations with a country which has declared war upon civilization, recall our Ambassador from Berlin, and hand Count Bernstorff his passports. Congress should be summoned in extra session, and an appropriation of at least $250,000,000 asked to put us in a condition to protect our rights as a neutral civilized power. At the same time we should invite all neutral nations of the world to join us in a council of civilization to agree upon the steps to be taken to protect the interests of all neutral powers and their citizens from such wanton acts of destruction of life and property as those which Germany has been committing and which have culminated in the destruction of the Lusitania and of so many of her passengers.

Until now the national Administration has been proceeding not only on the basis of "safety first," but of safety first, last and all the time. The time has arrived when we must remember the truth of what Lowell so well expressed, that

> "'Tis man's perdition to be safe, > when for the truth he ought to die."

GEO. W. WICKERSHAM.

THE CRIME IS WAR.

Why Rage Against the Germans for Breaking Its Rules?

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Is it not nonsense to rage against the Germans for breaking the rules of civilized warfare?

Civilized warfare! The very term is contradictory. It is like saying that one of the nine circles of hell is heavenly and is reserved for the good wicked souls who have been damned. It is a false and vicious logic which differentiates between murder and murder.

Civilized man should not complain when the rules of this game of murder are not observed, for such rules cannot and should not exist. It is a life and death struggle of brutish man in which there can be no fouls; every blow counts. If we tolerate war we must expect the commission of every outrage, every sin, and every crime. In fact, the greater the carnage of non-combatants, the greater the pillaging and burning of unfortified places, the greater the number of merchantmen and neutral vessels sunk, the better, for these horrible occurrences will perhaps at last open our eyes to the fact that what we want is not that unattainable thing—humane warfare—but a permanent peace. Let us pray for peace, for as a great English statesman said: "There never was a good war or a bad peace."

TIMES HISTORY PRAISED.

Valuable for Future Historians, Says a Professor of History.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As you know, THE NEW YORK TIMES Current History has been welcomed by students and librarians. Evidently, to a collector of documents, the present war and the period from 1770 to 1815 show great contrasts. Today we are ready to pay all sorts of prices for contemporary pamphlets dealing with the American Revolution, the French Revolution, and the Napoleonic period. The work which you are doing to preserve in convenient form the varied expressions of public opinion will be of undoubted value to future historical investigators; in the meantime current history, which as a whole represents so many points of view and so many aspects of the war, is of the greatest importance to every serious reader, and who is not serious in these days?

"Twilight Sleep" a Suffrage Plank.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Some of us have been expectantly waiting to see what attitude our women suffragettes would take toward "twilight sleep," a matter of such vital importance to their sex, nevertheless the target of so much unreasonable and unrighteous opposition. We have been led to assume from the advocates of the cause of suffrage that their aim is entirely for the betterment of women kind. Surely nothing could be of greater importance for them to accomplish than the emancipation of their sex from that which has been and now is its greatest curse—the sufferings of childbirth.

Now, surely nothing could be possibly more convincing than for these same women to so demonstrate it by taking an active part and furthering the cause of "twilight sleep" in protecting it from its enemies and insisting on its proper place in the domain of medicine, thus proving most unmistakably their sincerity for the true welfare of their sex. Christian Science Not Responsible.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

THE TIMES will doubtless see the injustice of connecting the subject of Christian Science with the double tragedy that took place on May 4 in the home of one Thomas P. Smith of Brooklyn. The inference was that Smith was a Christian Scientist and that the study of the subject deranged his mind and led him to commit the terrible crime. But the fact is that Smith was not a Christian Scientist, did not attend a Christian Science church, and, so far as we have been able to find out, was in no wise interested in the subject.

Mark Hopkins's Due.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your paper of Sunday last was a striking example of the play of "Hamlet" with Hamlet left out. In an article purporting to give an account of Williams College there is no mention of Mark Hopkins, who, more than Ephraim Williams, and more than all others combined who have ever been connected with the college, gave it its reputation and standing. The writer of that article, had he happened to enter the Capitol of the United States, would have seen the head of Mark Hopkins placed there by the Government on the new bronze door of the western front. The Fashion Plate Caricature.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I want to thank you for publishing the article by Katherine Tynan about the "Leering Devils," in the Fashion Plates. These plates, suggesting costumes for sensible women are an insult to the intelligence of women. The matter is certainly in women's province and it argues much against them that they have submitted to this sort of thing.

ALL THAT A GERMAN WANTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Although I usually abstain from wasting my time by arguing against British hypocrites and forgerers of the truth, I wish you would allow me to correct through your columns Mr. Noyes, the English poet's, statement concerning "German colonies" in South America.

Mr. Noyes (who probably, like most Englishmen, does not speak and understand German) apparently spoke under the impression that he has made a great discovery of a German plot when he noticed the words "Deutsche Kolonie" or "Ansiedelung" on the South American map of the Perthes Atlas. Everybody who has lived or traveled in South America knows that the immigrants of different nationalities make their new homes in different parts of the country, so that one speaks of Spanish, Italian, French, Russian, Turkish, and English as well as of German colonies without the slightest idea of political aims or influence from the previous Governments of these immigrants. No South American native has or will ever have this foolish thought—it takes a British maligner to bring up such arguments as a cheap propaganda for England and a missile against German honor and good reputation—but one of those missiles that fail to explode.

For further information I would advise Mr. Noyes to study his Perthes Atlas, and especially the South American map in it, where he will find (besides the German "Ansiedelungen") "English Colonies," like "Hurlingham" (near Buenos Aires) and "Temperley," for instance, which by no means are regarded as more than quarters where Germans or Englishmen live as loyal citizens of the respective State.

Germany has no intention to rule South American lands as colonies which practically are property of the German nation. All we want is trade and a happy and prosperous life for our people who adopt a foreign country as their home. German goods are sold all over South America, Germans become landowners and marry rich South American girls, German system and efficiency are highly appreciated, German officers are instructors of nearly all the armies of Latin America—what more does Germany need!

No, Mr. Noyes, your argument is, mildly expressed, idiotic, and shows again why England is waging this war: for jealousy!

COST OF MAKING ICE.

A Producer Says It Will Be $3 Per Ton for the City.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

For the last thirty years ice has been selling in New York City at approximately $3 per net ton or ten cents per hundred pounds to the dealer, with the exception that during such years that the ice crop failed; then price was regulated by the demand.

During the last ten years the important things in the manufacture of ice—namely, the coal and labor, which is 90 per cent. of the cost of ice—has almost been doubled in price. Plus this extra burden the manufacturer of artificial ice in New York City has been compelled under the State law during the last year to take out liability accident insurance at an enormous expense. To illustrate what I mean, the cost of a seventy-tons icemaking plant for this insurance during the last year has been over $600.

During the last year I have been operating this seventy-ton icemaking plant at an average price of about $2 per ton to the dealer, and at the end of the year I found that I had made no money. On May 1 all of my competitors raised the price of ice to $3, and I naturally followed suit.

During the Winter months the sale of ice is so light that all icemaking plants are operated during these six Winter months at a loss, and the only real harvest is during the Summer months; that is, as far as making enough money to pay for the Winter losses, plus a profit on the year's business. To be fair to every one, ice should be sold in New York City at $2.50 per ton in the Winter time and $3 per ton in the Summer time, regardless of the crop or any unforeseen conditions.

If the City of New York should start an artificial icemaking plant, such as has been suggested, it will no doubt find that its ice will cost it in the neighborhood of at least $3 per ton. ALBERT M. STADLER,
Proprietor S. & S. Ice Plant.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

At a time when the average citizen is surfeited with fault-finding in most public matters it is a positive pleasure to be able to call attention to a striking instance of real efficiency and improvement in a public service. Muzzle the Babies.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read in one of the daily papers that a young woman in Pittsfield, Mass., died at the home of blood poisoning which followed the bite of a baby. It seems she leaned over the baby, who bit her nose. The baby must have been mad. Now all babies should be muzzled. This should be a warning to all lovers of children to be careful of their bite.

DISTRESSED ALBANIA APPEALS FOR HELP

Cablegram Sent to State Department Says Thousands Are Utterly Destitute.

MERCY COMMITTEE TO AID

Auxiliary Committees of Women Join Forces to Assist Non-Combatants of Belgium.

The various committees organized in New York, following the outbreak of the European war, for the purpose of collecting funds to be used in the relief of war sufferers in Europe, all reported increased amounts last week, although in most instances the number of donations had greatly decreased as compared with those received during the first six months of the war.

A cablegram which was sent to the State Department and given by the department to the Committee of Mercy, 200 Fifth Avenue, was made public yesterday. The cablegram refers to the terrible sufferings of the Albanian people. The information was of special interest owing to the fact that very few facts had been received from Albania since the war started. The cablegram, which was addressed to Secretary of State Bryan, reads:

Encouraged by sentiments of uprightness and generosity of which chivalrous American people always were a shining example, the undersigned, unable to stand unmoved before the groans of thousands of their unfortunate brethren, venture to draw benevolent attention of the United States to the frightful suffering and hardships overwhelming poor Albanian refugees from the south who took refuge at Valona since last July in consequence of the insurrection brought on by Greek hands. Despoiled of their property by violence and plunder, driven from their homes by sword and fire, the Albanian refugees since last Summer are exposed to the vicissitudes of the weather and exhalations from the marshes of Valona, thrown over to utter destitution, the prey of famine and most deadly epidemics. In behalf of those spared by these two formidable foes of human life for even more horrible suffering, the undersigned have the honor humbly to pray the American Government and the many relief committees in the United States that they deign to cast a compassionate glance at the poor Albanian refugees at Valona and by prompt assistance save them from the sad extremity of ending with their own hands a life that has been made unbearable, as one of those unfortunates has already done.

The Committee of Mercy Fund, subscriptions to which should be sent to August Belmont, Treasurer, 200 Fifth Avenue, now totals $155,613.26. New subscriptions of $10 or more received the past week were:

Belgian Commission.

Without the aid of the woman's organizations in the United States, the work of aiding the non-combatants of Belgium would show a vast decrease. From various parts of the country reports have come to Mrs. Lindon W. Bates, chairman of the Woman's Section of the Commission for Relief in Belgium, 71 Broadway, showing that the women have been unceasing in their activities.

In New York State in particular the recent activities have been notable. A Utica branch of the Commission was recently formed, and the following officers have been elected: Bishop Olmstead, chairman; Charles J. Lamb, of the Utica Trust and Deposit Company, treasurer; Miss Ella Heffron, secretary.

In Goshen, N. Y., a similar committee was recently organized, and several hundred dollars were raised through a popular contribution, the proceeds of which were expended in food.

The Belgian Relief Fund now totals $1,035,072.82. Subscriptions should be sent to J. P. Morgan and Co., 23 Wall Street, or to the Belgian Relief Committee, 8-10 Bridge Street. Subscriptions of $10 or more received last week were:
